From Dezeen: Frank Lloyd Wright's School of Architecture moves to Paolo Soleri's Cosanti and Arcosanti campuses in Phoenix, AZ. The difficult split with the Frank Lloyd Wright Foundation means the famed school, which Wright established in the late 1930's, will leave all buildings owned by the foundation and must forego the name Taliesin.

A letter to Mies from Dash Marshall, an architect renovating one of his buildings.

Kate Wagner on the vaporware of design, PR-chitecture: proposed projects, ideas, and innovations that generate a lot of hype and publicity and yet never materialize.

New: #148/Last Flight Outta New York: Julia Gamolina and Gene Kaufman. Host George Smart talks with two architects in New York the day before COVID-19 was declared a pandemic. Born in Russia, raised in Canada, and now living in the US, architect Julia Gamolina has been a runaway success as the founder of Madame Architect, publishing over 100 interviews with women who advance the practice of architecture and affiliated fields, celebrating women from different generations, countries, and corners of the industry. Access to legacy publications has never been more critical for Modernist preservation. Many thanks to the University of Hawai'i at Mānoa, especially Art Archivist Librarian Malia Van Heukelem, for donating approximately 200,000 pages of architecture magazines to the USModernist Library. That's about the height of a five-story building, if you stack them all up. The USModernist Library is the world's largest open digital collection of major US 20th-century architecture publications, with approximately 2.8 million searchable pages - all free to access. Other sponsors and donors include the Smithsonian Institution, Atomic Ranch, Philip Kennedy-Grant, AIA New York, AIA Virginia, AIA
