How the Project Happened

The Chapter’s 1980 move to the Villard Houses was an accomplishment applauded by all. Much credit was due the Municipal Art Society for having secured the North Wing, once the William Fahnstock house, a 1922 alteration by Charles Platt combining two of the original residences, and subsequently occupied by Random House.

The Chapter was assigned a very desirable space at the Madison Avenue end above the main floor, including a northwest room previously occupied by Bennett Cerf, a narrow center room, and the oak paneled southwest room, which had been the Fahnstock library, but which had been cut up by Random House. The question facing the Chapter was how to make this space workable and bring it up to the standard of the altogether remarkable Villard Houses location.

William Conklin, Chapter president at the time of the move, assigned Bartholomew Voorsanger, then an Executive Committee member, to make recommendations. It was at first felt that the main task would be to refurbish the paneled room. But Voorsanger and the Executive Committee kept running into the insoluble problem of designing a room where members could drop in, but where, more often than not, they would encounter a committee in session. This would not do if the new headquarters were truly to belong to the membership.

By 1981, in John Belle’s term as president, it was seen that something more extensive than mere refurbishing had to be done, and Voorsanger & Mills Associates were commissioned to develop a plan. A representative panel of Chapter members—people interested in the Chapter but not currently active in it—was invited to review the architect’s proposals and to advise on whether it would be feasible to raise the necessary funds. For it was felt that the project should be paid for entirely through voluntary contributions.

The result was that Voorsanger & Mills was authorized to proceed with the scheme that has now been executed. There is a new committee room. There is adequate built-in storage for the staff. The executive director has a handsome new office in what was the Xerox room. What is most important is that the Chapter now has a Members Gallery where one can go to meet friends, or to read, and where it is intended that a series of exhibitions of distinguished architectural drawings will be on public view.

So the Chapter now has a headquarters that is more than merely a workable space. It is a center worthy of the New York profession. To quote from an editorial comment in the issue of Oculus that announced the project, “It is the contribution of what all architects mean by ‘design’ — the creation of something that meaningfully proclaims its use and users, its stature and prestige.”

Architectural Drawings in the Members Gallery

The Members Gallery will on one hand be for meeting friends, for reading and relaxing. And a fund for subscriptions to foreign magazines has been contributed by Mrs. Douglas Haskell (who also initiated the Douglas Haskell Awards for Student Journalism).

It is also anticipated that the room will provide the setting for a new Chapter venture: regular public showings of distinguished architectural drawings selected from the collections of The Avery Library, The National Academy of Design, and other sources.

The Members Gallery has the potential of being the one place in New York, certainly in midtown, where architectural drawings from distinguished collections can be regularly put on view, and the Chapter sets great store on being able to offer this opportunity to the general public in our superb midtown location.

The Current Exhibit of Drawings
Now on the walls, through October 29—in the first of what is hoped will be a continuing series open to the public—are drawings by Alexander Jackson Davis, James Renwick, Richard Upjohn, Richard M. Upjohn, and Birch Burdette Long, all lent by Avery Library.

This exhibit, which has involved one-time initial expenditures for reusable illuminated frames, daylight control, and insurance, is made possible by a grant from The J.M. Kaplan Fund. In overall charge as curator is Lindsay Stamm Shapiro, who worked closely with Janet Parks, Curator of Drawings at The Avery Library. Rob Sawchuck of The Metropolitan Museum assisted with the installation, and it should be noted that Bartholomew Voorsanger had everything to do with initiating the concept.

Opening on November 10 will be a second exhibit, "Remembering Josep Lluis Sert," with material selected by his partner Huson Jackson, including sketches, mementos, snapshots, and some architectural photographs, all providing a sense of the man's life.

Chapter Reports

by George Lewis

- Theodore Liebman together with Kent Barwick, President of the Municipal Art Society, wrote a letter in The New York Times, August 27th drawing attention to the importance of careful selection of developers for the West 42nd Street project. They pointed out, “While it would be comforting to believe that the issue of who builds and what on 42nd Street is secondary to harmonious relations between the State and the City, the real question is whether or not the agencies involved are taking reasonable steps to see to it that something actually happens.”

- On Thursday October 20, 6:00 p.m. Edward Logue, who has been central to some of the most exciting architectural projects undertaken in the last decade, will discuss his observations on architects, architecture, and the public and private sectors. The meeting is organized by the newly reactivated Public Architects Committee, chaired by Adrienne Breslin and Sarelle Weisberg. There are many architects in government and quasi-government agencies in this vicinity, and a major effort is being made to reach as many of them as possible to attend this event in the expectation that this important part of the architectural profession can begin to identify common ground.

- The Interiors Committee, Kenneth van der Kolk, chairman, has arranged for a relaxation area from 10:00 to 3:00 for Chapter members attending Designers Saturday on October 15. It is on the ground floor of The International Design Center of New York, 919 Third Avenue at 56th Street.

- The Chapter testified in support of the Mayor’s nomination of Gene Norman as Chairman of the Landmarks Preservation Commission at a City Council committee hearing in July. Subsequently in The New York Times on July 30 a letter from George Lewis took issue with a correspondent who had called for an independent cont’d. p. 11, col. 3

Sir Nikolaus Pevsner, 1902-1983

Sir Nikolaus Pevsner, the distinguished art historian whose monumental writings have so much influenced generations of scholars, architects, and preservationists all over the world, died on August 18th at his home in England after a long illness. Pevsner was born in Leipzig in 1902 and emigrated to England in 1934. He was editor of The Architectural Review from 1942 to 1945. His Pioneers of Modern Design from William Morris to Walter Gropius has been a bible for architects, designers, and historians ever since it was first published in 1936. His classic history, An Outline of European Architecture was first published in 1943 and has gone through many subsequent editions. His Buildings of England, the knowledgeable and eminently readable series of 47 volumes published between 1951 and 1974 is not only unique but what The Times of London has rightly called "super guide-books." He was awarded the Royal Gold Medal for architecture in 1969. These are but a few highlights of the 81-year-old historian's copious and many-faceted career. "What a man. And what a performance," in the words of his colleague Geoffrey Moorhouse. "More than any other historian," says Arthur Rosenblatt, "Pevsner excited and gave direction to my generation of architects." Below are a few quotes culled from obituaries and recollections of Pevsner appearing in London newspapers shortly after his death:

"The best epitaph for any critic is that he made us see. Pevsner's eye, peering and quizzical behind his spectacles, did more than make us see. He made us angry. He did not do this with any strident call to arms. He abhorred the junk prose which nowadays passes for much specialist architectural writing. He came to the English language as he came to English buildings, fresh and eager but humble." Simon Jenkins in The Observer.

"He was that rarest of all observers, the man who knows better than most what the world outside contains but who understands the heart of the most limited native within." Geoffrey Moorhouse in The Times.

"... one of the few historians of his or any other generation whose name has become a household word." J.M. Richards in The Sunday Times.

"He won the admiration of scholars all over the world and of all shades of opinion through the breadth of his knowledge ... and the quality of his writing. In all this is combined deep learning, sound judgment and quiet humor. One of his most valuable characteristics at a time of conflicting theories was his good humoured refusal to be either bluffed or stompeded by extremists on either side, academic, preservationist or modernist, or to be shocked at the progress of events." The Times.

"Nikolaus Pevsner's place in the English pantheon is an exceptional one. ... Not even Banister Fletcher left such a legacy of architectural scholarship." Geoffrey Moorhouse in The Times.

"Pevsner's major contribution to art history was to bring to life the most brilliant and productive period of British architecture: that of the Victorian age. ... As with Wingaerde and Hollar, the British seem to require foreigners to unveil the treasures and delights of surroundings." Simon Jenkins in The Observer.

Of the Buildings of England: "Enter any cathedral or great house, village street or Victorian factory and Pevsner is at your side, stooping, omniscient, the ubiquitous chaperone ... one of the major achievements of British art history ... It honoured his dictum that architectural history should 'describe and convert' ... Pevsner's technique was meticulous and Germanic: detailed research through county libraries, immaculate planning and a punishing series of tours ... This catholicity of taste across the ages — for such an enthusiast for style — was itself a remarkable critical feat." Simon Jenkins in The Observer.

"... with omnivorous appetite and discriminating taste, he aimed to record every notable product of architecture from the distant past to the present day, county by county, the two volumes on London alone being remarkable in the ground they covered." The Times.

Fireplaces and Architectural Design

On November 10, 1983 at 6 p.m. at the Urban Center, the Energy and Environment Committee of the NYC/AIA will sponsor a seminar on Fireplaces and Architectural Design. The seminar will focus on the role of fireplaces in creating thermal, spatial, and psychological environments, on energy considerations, and on the specific problems of constructing fireplaces in urban buildings. The speakers will be: Halsted S. Welles of the Welles Fireplace Co., who will speak on the design and construction of fireplaces in New York City. Fred Zonsius, an architect with Kohn Pederson Fox, and a member of the Energy and Environment Committee, who will speak on examples of fireplaces in Scandinavian architecture and in the work of Frank Lloyd Wright.

mayoral commission to review aspects of landmarking procedures.

- At a Landmarks Commission hearing September 20 the Chapter recommended designation of that part of Rockefeller Center surrounding the skating rink. The Commission's proposal included all the buildings east of the Avenue of the Americas.

- An agenda of planning and preservation issues of uncommonly far-reaching importance will be addressed this fall by Chapter ad hoc committees, including the continuing question of theater preservation, which has raised unprecedented proposals for development rights transfers; the Planning Department's proposals for a general revision of Upper West Side zoning being prepared in company with a Community Board 7 committee chaired by Chapter member Diane Serber; and the legislation first introduced in Albany in late spring that would remove religious properties from mandatory provisions in landmarks laws throughout the State.

How the Project is Being Funded

As said above, it was decided that the new headquarters should be entirely paid for through voluntary contributions (certain related expenses such as the staff move and the cost of borrowed money have been covered by a withdrawal from the Contingent Reserve Fund).

The total project cost, in round numbers, is $245,000: $160,000 for construction, $53,000 for furnishings (a very low figure that reflects contributions in varying degrees by all the suppliers), and $32,000 for fees and reimbursables.

Of the $245,000, $187,000 has been contributed or pledged, leaving $58,000 still to be secured. Four firms: Haines Lundberg Waehler, Johnson/Burgee, I.M. Pei & Partners, and Swanke Hayden Connell & Partners set the initial pace by pledging $15,000 each. Certain firms have indicated that they do intend to pledge but have not yet done so. It is urgent that the difference be made up. Our fund-raising effort has been low key, perhaps too much so. But with the headquarters now complete it is very much hoped that firms and individual members who have not yet responded will see the worth to the New York architecture profession of doing so.

The furnishings constitute a large contribution, and Ms. Karen Haber of Swanke Hayden Connell & Partners should be singled out for her part in the arrangements. The list of suppliers is elsewhere in this issue. In all cases the furnishings were provided below the usual costs, and in some cases were contributed outright.

The Executive Director’s office is now an appropriate inner sanctum.
