What's In a Name?

Virginia's Counties

By Carl Shires

INDIANS, a big hunk of rock, an altitude, old Ben Franklin of Philadelphia, famous and not-quite-so-famous Virginians—these were among the inspirations for the naming of the counties of the Commonwealth. Revolutionary War leaders of varying heroic capacities were high, too, on the inspirational level.

But it was Englishmen and women of the royalty and sub-royalty genre who accounted for the naming of 40 of the current 95 Virginia counties. Sometimes they didn't have to do anything particularly honorable to be honored in having an across-the-ocean county named for them. Just be born; that's all it took in some instances.

Any modern Englishman—be he/she of royalty, sub-royalty, less-than-royalty social standing—bearing the vaguest knowledge of his/her country's history and geography might feel right at home coming to Virginia and mustering a map bearing the alphabetical list of Virginia's counties. For, in addition to the 40 already classified, another 15 of Virginia's counties bear names of geographical locations in England.

A Revolutionary War, however, put a virtual end to the English influence on Virginia county nomenclature. After the unpleasantness of 1776, there came an outburst of more provincial county naming, the names picking out war figures on the American side of hostilities. Some of those figures were Virginians; some were not. Virginian or no, however, the count is 14 among the state's existing counties. The count is still higher if you mix in the counties in what is now West Virginia. More of West Virginia later.

It was only appropriate and natural that Virginia's own Washington, George, would be the first Revolutionary hero to have a Virginia county named for him (subsequently, there would be 30 more in other states). That was in 1776, when the county bearing his name was formed out in the state's Southwest.

Another Virginian, Patrick Henry, of considerable Revolutionary renown, wasn't far behind. There is Henry County, down near North Carolina, formed that same year. And who else but the "liberty or death" man has two Virginia counties named for him? Patrick County came along in 1790.

Most of these, and many, many other facts, figures, observations, insights and trivias concerning counties in Virginia and elsewhere come through courtesy of Julian H. Osborne, Richmond's portly former Commissioner of Revenue.

Osborne is a walking encyclopedia on counties. He probably could make it on that incredibly bad TV show called "That's Incredible" if he could learn to jump over three flaming non-contiguous counties in a single bound. He is a man who can tell you all you ever wanted to know about counties . . . and then some. Pete Streat, an Osborne friend, told him one day he had a head more jammed with trivia than anybody in the world. Osborne just grinned, recited more county trivia.

But there's more in his head than trivia. When a man spends as much time as he in the study of counties, a vast knowledge of history, geography, and the whims of people is bound to come, through osmosis, if by no other means.

Osborne, former Richmond Democratic chairman and once 20-year employee with the State Corporation Commission, can perform on request (and sometimes sans request) some amazing memory feats on counties.

Ask him to name the 254 Texas counties. He can do it. Ask him the number of counties in the long, foreign names Shrine temples bear. He's doing it.

Back to counties, here are some of the things he knows concerning them:

The total in the United States is 3,006. Tack onto that 64 Louisiana parishes and 44 independent cities (41 of them in Virginia). Add four Alaska divisions. Texas, with its 254, naturally has the most. Delaware, with 3, has the least among the states. There are five in Hawaii. (Osborne has visited four of those; he saw the fifth and got to the seeing place by mule, but didn't visit—that one is a leper colony.)

Of the total, he figures he has visited at least 900. Of all the county names, Washington (31) is the most popular. Jefferson is close behind with 26. For Madison, it's 20, for Monroe and Lafayette the count is 17 (but some of the 17 dropped the French "La" and go strictly as Fayette).

That's the case, as example, up in West Virginia, which broke away from Virginia June 20, 1863, during the Civil War. In breaking, it took with it some old Virginia names: Jefferson, Monroe, Tyler, Harrison, Nicholas, McDowell, Cabell, Gilmer, Lewis . . .

What it took was 50 Virginia counties, but ultimately formed five more. One new one was called Lincoln. It surely is superfluous to write that there was no Virginia county named Lincoln. But there are 25 of those about the nation. "Not all of them for Abe, though," said Osborne. "There were some Lincolns before him."

At one time or another there were 173 Virginia counties, but those 50 went to West Virginia, Kentucky got nine more, and 19 have become extinct, largely through merger into cities. Princess Anne, Nansemond, Charles River, Elizabeth City are among those that are no more.

There have got to be some qualifications and asterisks when one starts categorizing Virginia counties by name origin, says expert Osborne. With that admonition firmly in mind—and with some explanations and qualifications to follow—

United States. He can tell you. Ask him the counties in which every college football game for the coming weekend would be played. He can do it.

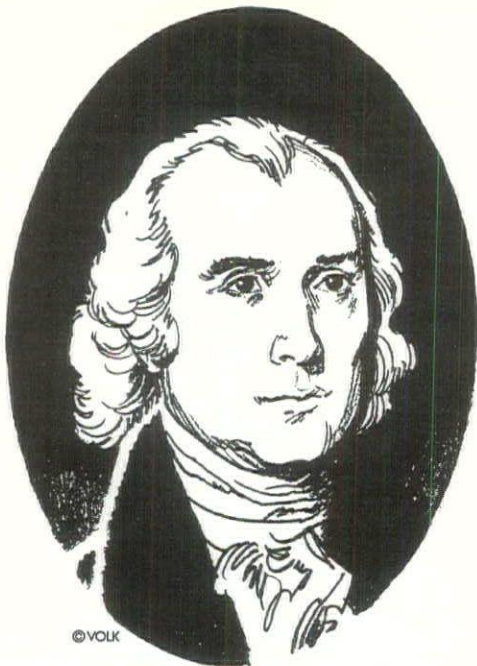

He's got a system: First, you get all the counties in any state in alphabetical order. Then you transpose them onto a yellow legal pad. There are 34 lines on a legal pad. You know how many pages of names you've got. You know how many you've got left over on the final page. You use certain memory devices. You He can explain it and probably he understands it. Nobody else does.

He started off with Virginia; that wasn't enough. He expanded to West Virginia; that wasn't enough. He moved east, west, north, south. He finally ran out of counties to memorize; he has taken on other things.

Alaska has a dearth of counties; Osborne decided to memorize its 29 election districts—and did. There are 185 Shrine temples in the United States. He decided to memorize those here are classifications garnered through Osborne, and through research at the State Library. A big boost was provided through a book written by Raus McDill Hanson, emeritus professor of geography at Madison College, Harrisonburg. Indian—“Alleghany named for the mountains and meaning “endless”; Nottoway, for the Nadowa tribe, “snake” or “enemy”; Powhatan, Indian chief; Rappahannock, “quick rising waters”; Roanoke, for the Roenake tribe, meaning “shell money”; *Shenandoah, “beautiful daughter of the stars”; *Accomack, from Accomac, “other side of water place”; Appomattox, “tobacco plant country.”

English place names—Bath (but some say it could for the springs up there in the mountains); Essex; Gloucester; Isle of Wight; Lancaster; Middlesex; New Kent; Northampton; Northumberland; Richmond; Stafford; Surry; Sussex; York; Westmoreland.

Revolutionary War figures (some Virginians, some not)—Bland; Carroll; Clark; Grayson; Patrick; Henry; Lee; Mathews; Russell; Washington; Wythe; Campbell; *Greensville; Green; Montgomery; and Warren.

Lords, Dukes, Earls, etc.—Amherst; Bedford; Botetourt; Chesterfield; Culpeper; Cumberland; Fairfax; Fauquier; Goochland; Southampton; Halifax; Loudoun; Pittsylvania; Albemarle; Dinwiddie; Rockingham; Spotsylvania.

Royalty—Amelia; Augusta; Caroline; Charles City; Charlotte; *Fluvanna; Frederick; Hanover; Henrico; James City; King and Queen; King George; King William; Louisa; Lunenburg; Mecklenburg; Orange; Prince Edward; Prince George; Prince William; Brunswick; and Gloucester.

Miscellany—Arlington, formerly Alexandria County, but renamed after an estate in the area following the retrocession of a part of the District of Columbia to Virginia.

Highland, so named because its highest mean altitude tops all Virginia counties.

Patrick Henry

Pulaski, named after Polish Count Casimer Pulaski, killed in the siege of Savannah in 1779.

Rockbridge, Natural Bridge, a wonder of the world, is located in this county.

Buchanan, named after the Pennsylvania-born 15th President.

Franklin, for the Philadelphia sage and statesman.

And now to explain some of those asterisks and qualifications:

Greenville might belong under the lords and dukes category, and have been named for Sir William Grenville, leader of the Roanoke Island settlement in 1585. Scholars disagree.

The mountains are spelled Allegheny; the county Alleghany; early spellers were often casual spellers.

Shenandoah, founded in 1772, once was called Dunmore, after the last Colonial governor of Virginia. But in 1777, the name was changed to one prettier than Dunmore and one less offensive to revolutionaries.

Accomack is the spelling officially designated by the General Assembly in 1940. The town still is spelled Accomac. Again, early spellers frequently were casual.

On Fluvanna, Osborne will give a little argument about putting that in the royalty category. It could go either way. It was formed in 1777, after Independence and literally means Anna's river (fleuve in French). But then Anne was royalty and the river was named for her.

One last note on counties:

There were eight original shires (counties) in Virginia: Isle of Wight, Henrico, James City, Charles City, Accomack, Charles River, Elizabeth City, and Warwick. The latter three are no more.

And Osborne, forever thinking counties, thought it simply delightful that a person bearing the English name for county was writing this piece.

Marquis de Lafayette

64th Governor of the Commonwealth Inaugurated January 16, 1982

CHARLES SPITTAL ROBB became the 64th Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia when he was inaugurated Jan. 16, according to the State Library and the Report of the Secretary of the Commonwealth.

The line of gubernatorial succession beginning in 1776 includes Patrick Henry, Thomas Jefferson and James Monroe.

The count of 64 is of those persons who held the title of Governor and omits those who served as Acting Governor or Provisional Governor. Some Acting Governors served as briefly as four days.

The count includes Francis H. Pierpoint, who served as Governor in 1865-1868 by appointment of United States authorities.

It also counts twice those Governors who served non-consecutive terms. They include Patrick Henry (1776-1779 and 1784-1786), James Monroe (1799-1802 and January to April, 1811), William "Extra Billy" Smith (1846-1849 and 1864-65) and Mills E. Godwin Jr., (1966-1970 and 1974-1978). Counting these Governors twice follows precedent set by the federal government, according to the State Library.

A complete listing of the Governors of Virginia, from 1606 forward, can be found in the Report of the Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Governors during the colonial period were generally appointed by the British Crown.

"After the colony declared independence," the Report says, "a constitution was adopted which provided for the election of the governor by the General Assembly for a one-year term. A governor could be re-elected to serve a total of three consecutive years."

From 1776 to 1852, the Report says, the governor was chosen by the General Assembly. If a vacancy occurred through death or resignation, the senior member of the Council of State acted as governor until the Assembly was able to elect a successor.

"The Constitution of 1851 abolished the Council of State and provided for the popular election of the Governor for a four-year term," the Report says.

While others have served non-consecutive terms, Godwin is thus the only Governor ever to be elected twice by popular vote.

64TH GOVERNOR
OF THE
COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA

CHARLES S. ROBB

By Nancy M. Kent

The Robbs' youngest daughter, Jennifer, follows her father's example.

WHEN CHARLES SPITTAL ROBB was inaugurated as Governor of Virginia, "To build a Virginia future worthy of her past," became more than a campaign slogan. In closing his inaugural address, Robb used the phrase to sum up the goals of the new administration. Education, he said, would be a top priority. He also spoke of plans to attract new business and expand existing industry to create the 50,000 new jobs Virginia is going to need each year during the next decade.

Throughout the address, he frequently referred to himself as Virginia's chief executive, a title which underlines his commitment to Virginia's economic prosperity.

"I am determined," he said in his state of the Commonwealth address, "that as long as I am chief executive of Virginia, economic development will be an instrument, not only for social advancement, but for social justice."

"I don't think there's any doubt," he said during the campaign, "that during the decade of the '80s we are going to be facing some of the most difficult budgetary decisions we have ever encountered in state government."

"Persistent inflation and cutbacks from Washington make it mandatory that we conduct a re-evaluation of state government and its priorities."

Federal budget cuts alone will cost Virginia over $780 million in the next three fiscal years.

The Robb Plan for Economic Development, which was developed during the gubernatorial campaign, outlines his proposals for improving Virginia's economy. Eleven specific areas including business tax policy, regulatory reform, energy management, transportation and agriculture are covered in the plan.

"I believe that economic development is the single most important challenge for the remainder of this century," said Robb. "But we can't do it without quality education. As far as I'm concerned, education is the indispensable bridge to economic opportunity."

"Education is the one area where funding shouldn't be cut," he said. "Students must be assured a good, sound educational program."

yer; former state Senator Armistead L. Boothe of Alexandria; State Senator Edward E. Willey of Richmond; Delegate Richard M. Bagley of Hampton; Delegate Joan S. Jones of Lynchburg; Dr. William R. Harvey, president of Hampton Institute and Dr. Edgar F. Shannon, former president and faculty member of Virginia Commonwealth University.

A second, 20-member transition advisory committee was composed of persons with various areas of expertise. This committee advised on legislation and appointments to key areas within the administration.

Robb also held a series of four transition meetings throughout the state. The meetings, which were open to the press, included persons representing varied interests including local government, teachers, the handicapped, health care and senior citizens.

Throughout the transition, Robb was guided by a two-volume document produced by his transition chief Dave McCloud. Using previous transition documents as a guide, McCloud worked for more than six months producing the volume which, according to Robb, would help him to "hit the ground running."

McCloud consulted varied sources ranging from the National Governor's Conference to the heads of other transition teams.

The resulting 300-page book included an outline of state budget and revenue, an overview of state agencies and an organizational chart of state employees.

"It (the book) tries to set forth the issues the governor is going to face and have to make decisions on," said McCloud.

The book also contains a section called "Promises, Promises," which lists all the commitments made throughout the campaign. It provides answers to whether legislation or Executive Order is needed to fill the promises.

To ensure that nothing was overlooked in the transition, Robb met with each of his living gubernatorial predecessors: State Supreme Court Judge Albert S. Harrison, Jr., who was governor from 1962-1966; Mills E. Godwin, Jr., who was governor from 1966-1970 and 1974-1978; and Governor John N. Dalton.

The thorough, methodical nature of the transition is the result of Robb's "judicious style of management," said McCloud. The style developed during his careers as a marine officer, lawyer and Virginia's lieutenant governor since 1978.

As lieutenant governor, Robb devoted full time to a job which, for many, had been part-time. During his four years of office, Robb acted as a spokesman for Virginia within and outside the state.

In addition to his primary responsibilities as presiding officer of the Vir-

To ensure quality education, Robb proposed improvement of teacher salaries to make them competitive with private industry.

Economic development and education are not Robb's sole priorities. "There are other things we need to do," he said. "We need to develop our energy resources, protect the security of our senior citizens, provide tough law enforcement and, at the same time, balance the budget."

To meet these goals with dwindling resources, Robb emphasizes the need for a cooperative relationship with both Virginia's legislative and business leaders. Reduction in federal revenue and the need for continued services and improvements, particularly in education and the state's highway and prison systems, demand a cooperative and innovative relationship with Virginia's legislative and business leaders, according to Robb.

As a first step in developing this relationship, Robb used the two-and one-half month transition period to solicit the advice and recommendations of many groups in his selection of persons to head key posts in state government.

"The opportunity to make key appointments is one of the real opportunities a governor has to shape the destiny of the state," he said.

Two advisory boards were created to help with selections. The first, which assisted in selection of the cabinet, included Carter O. Lowance, an assistant to former Virginia governors; William L. Zimmer, III, a Richmond lawginia senate, Robb served as chairman of the National Conference of Lieutenant Governors, the first Virginian elected to that office.

The then-candidate renewed his ties with the Marine Corps at a recent campaign stop.

Robb set an earlier precedent in 1977 when he won election by 100,000 votes, carrying more Congressional District than any other candidate and receiving more votes than any other lieutenant governor in Virginia's history.

His decision to enter politics was not without family precedent. His maternal grandfather managed Woodrow Wilson's 1916 presidential campaign and a paternal grandfather served as a long-time executive secretary to U.S. Senator Gassaway Davis of West Virginia.

Robb was born in 1939 in Arizona. His parents James and Francis Robb had moved to the state for a business venture. Eventually, the family returned to Virginia and settled in Fairfax County. There Robb attended Mount Vernon High School.

After graduation, he attended Cornell University on an academic/athletic scholarship. At Cornell, he joined the Reserve Officer Training Corps (ROTC). It was the beginning of a 23-year association with the armed forces.

Following a year at Cornell, Robb transferred to the University of Wisconsin on an ROTC scholarship. There he was a member of the student senate and commander of all ROTC units on campus.

Robb graduated first in his ROTC class and set a record for the number of awards received by a graduating senior.

After graduation, he began his active duty with the Marine Corps at Quantico, Virginia. In competition with newly commissioned officers from all over the country, he finished first in leadership and first in the overall standings. He was awarded an engraved sword as class Honor Graduate.

His first assignment was aboard the USS Northampton followed by a stint at Camp Lejeune, North Carolina.

It was during an assignment as a Marine first lieutenant at the White House that he met 23-year-old Lynda Bird Johnson, the eldest daughter of President Lyndon Baines Johnson.

The two shared many interests including a love of bridge, theater and the arts. Their White House wedding on December 9, 1967, was the first of a presidential daughter in 50 years.

National interest was so great that no aspect of the wedding preparations was too trivial for the press to cover. Press secretary Liz Carpenter even put the amount of raisins to be placed on the wedding cake in a jar and held a contest among the press to guess the correct number.

Two months after the wedding, Robb left for Vietnam. Within weeks of his arrival there, he led a combat mission for which he was awarded the Bronze Star. The Robb's first child, Lucinda Desha, was born while Robb was in Vietnam. They have since had two more children, Catherine Lewis, and Jennifer Wickliffe.

After returning home Robb was head of the principle nationwide recruiting program for Marine officers until he left active duty to study law.

Robb received his law degree in 1967 from the University of Virginia Law School. During his years at the university he was elected to the Raven Society, Omicron Delta Kappa and was honored by the Seven Society.

Robb began his legal career in the U.S. Court of Appeals in Richmond with a judicial clerkship to Judge John D. Butzner, Jr. This was followed by his association with the law firm headed by Edward Bennett Williams.

During a press conference following his 1977 election to the office of Lieutenant Governor, Robb said, "I am ready to do my part, wherever and whenever I can, to help build the Democratic Party of Virginia." Four years later, greeting followers after his election as the first Democratic governor in 12 years, his first words were, "How sweet it is! You've gotta believe, and you did believe, and it's Ours!"

First Lady of the Commonwealth

LYNDA JOHNSON ROBB

By Nancy M. Kent

AS WIFE OF newly elected Governor Charles S. Robb, Lynda Robb balances the demands of a husband, three children and a household with the stress of public life.

"Women have always been jugglers," she once told a reporter, "and sometimes you have to decide who needs you the most."

Despite this constant juggling act, Mrs. Robb makes time to serve on the boards of the Virginia Center for the Creative Arts, Honor America Day, The National Home Library Foundation and Woodlawn Plantation. She also served as 1981 and '82 Easter Seal Chairman as well as a library aide in her children's school and Girl Scout S.M.E. chairman.

In addition to her volunteer projects, she chaired the President's Advisory Committee for Women during the Carter administration. Her schedule, that often runs seven days a week, rivals her husband's. Raised in a political family, however, Mrs. Robb is no stranger to public service.

"I consider myself a professional volunteer," said Mrs. Robb. "You are always filling out job forms where they ask what you do, and although I have held many paid jobs, I still consider myself a professional volunteer."

Throughout her career as a professional volunteer, Mrs. Robb has maintained a 14-year commitment to Reading is FUNDamental (RIF). RIF is a motivational program to get books into the hands of children.

RIF was started in the late 1960s. Mrs. Robb calls herself a "foremother," one of those who worked to start RIF on a national level. She also helped start the first programs in Virginia. The state program has grown to more than 2,000 volunteers sponsoring programs for 56,000 children.

Mrs. Robb continues to serve on the national and Northern Virginia boards. Even during the campaign, it was almost always possible to fit in "just one more personal appearance for RIF."

"It's time consuming but stimulating," she said. "It's something I care about, and when you care you make the time."

"For many of the children, a RIF book is the first book they choose themselves that belongs to them."

As a spokesman for RIF, Mrs. Robb does not confine herself to meeting with adult groups. During many appearances she helps distribute the books. If time permits, she often plunks down to read with the children. "It's fun to read, but it's even more fun to be read to," said one small observer.

"Reading is so important. It makes us happier and more independent," said Mrs. Robb. "An illiterate person is so dependent on others. If we can be more self-reliant, we can lead more productive lives."

As she sees it, education is not the only benefit of the program. "RIF encourages families to work with their children," she said.

Mrs. Robb shares her interest with her own children. Lucinda Desha (Cindy), 13, Catherine Lewis (Cathy), 11, and Jennifer Wickliffe, 3, often employ their mother's volunteer talents.

"I'm very busy with my children," she said. "They volunteer me for everything. As if I didn't have enough to do, they always find something to keep me busy."

Mrs. Robb often picks up the children after school and then hurries them through dinner and baths in preparation for a favorite movie or theater performance.

The daughter of a politician herself, Mrs. Robb knows well the stress of public life. Her father, Lyndon Baines Johnson, had been in Congress for seven years by the time she was born in 1944. She attended public and private schools in Washington, D.C., Johnson City and Austin, Texas. She graduated from the National Cathedral School for Girls in 1962.

Mrs. Robb attended the University of Texas and George Washington University. As a freshman at the University of Texas, she was inducted into Alpha Lambda Delta, the national freshman honor society.

While she was a sophomore, the assassination of John F. Kennedy changed her lifestyle drastically. As the daughter of a president, she immediately became the focus of attention.

It was during her White House years she met Marine officer Charles Robb. The two were married on December 9, 1967. Theirs was the first White House wedding since 1942 when Secretary of Commerce Harry L. Hopkins married Miss Louise Gill Macy with the blessing of President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

At the time of her own marriage, Mrs. Robb was a contributing editor for McCall's magazine. She joined the publication after graduation with honors from the University of Texas. In 1968, she joined the staff of Ladies' Home Journal as a contributing editor. During her career, Mrs. Robb has written stories on a variety of topics including famous mothers and daughters and presidential children.

Shortly after the Robbs were married, Robb was sent to Vietnam. Their first child, Cindy, was born while her father was in combat overseas.

"He didn't see Cindy until she was six months old," said Mrs. Robb.

After completing 10 years of active duty in the Marine Corps, Robb enrolled in the University of Virginia law school. The family moved to Charlottesville, where Mrs. Robb took care of the house and children, now numbering two, while he studied.

While in Charlottesville, Mrs. Robb helped start a law wives ecology group. The organization began a glass recycling project which lessened the need for acreage for sanitary landfill.

"There is a lot of valuable land in Charlottesville," said Mrs. Robb. "Recycling the glass saved some of it from becoming a sanitary landfill."

The recycling project still operates. After graduation, Robb began one year as a law clerk with Judge John D. Butzner, Jr., in the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals.

While living in Richmond, Mrs. Robb continued to work with RIF and helped start a program in Hampton.

After completing his clerkship, Robb joined the law firm headed by Edward Bennett Williams. The family moved to their present home in McLean. In 1976, Robb left the firm to run for the post of lieutenant governor.

Mrs. Robb believes the best piece of advice she ever received about being the wife of a politician was to maintain a sense of humor and keep things in perspective.

"Some days I'm introduced as the wife of Charles Robb. Some days I'm introduced as the mother of . . . or the daughter of . . ." she once told a Richmond Women's Club.

As the wife of Virginia's governor, Mrs. Robb plans to remain an active volunteer. She will continue her work with RIF, making personal appearances to promote the organization. In addition, she will serve as Easter Seal chairman for a second year.

Mrs. Robb particularly looks forward to traveling throughout the state.

"I'm a big tourist. I love looking at historical sights," she said. "I want to make time to see many battlefields, historic homes and all the sites of interest."

As First Lady of the Old Dominion, she should be able to fulfill her desire beyond her expectations.

LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR
OF THE

RICHARD J. DAVIS

Richard III and his sister Ashley participated in Headquarters Ribbon Cutting Ceremonies with their mother and father.

This article is an excerpt from an interview—by Shirley Bolinaga of the "Virginian Pilot"—at the Davis' home in the summer of 1980.

Ask Richard J. Davis why he went into politics and he reaches back 52 years for an answer.

He recalls November 1928. Herbert Hoover and Alfred E. Smith were winding up their campaign for the presidency, a campaign that for many voters had only one issue—religion, not politics. Smith was a Catholic, and the land founded on religious freedom was not ready to elect a Catholic president.

In Portsmouth, the Ku Klux Klan reacted to the national campaign by burning a cross on the porch of the home of a prominent lawyer, one of the city's few Catholics.

It happened that the lawyer, at 52, was dying of cancer.

It all made an indelible impression on the lawyer's young son.

"It seemed to me, even at seven years old, that this was a wrong way to select a President, and that there should be nothing wrong with me or my family or Al Smith because we were Catholic," Davis said.

"That was an impression I've always carried with me," he said. "I suppose it was one of the reasons I sought to make a contribution to righting some injustices."

Growing up in poverty after his father died, and desiring to contribute something to help "pay back" his city and state, also influenced Davis' political leanings.

"This sounds a little Pollyanna-ish, but this city and state have been good to me," he said.

Dick Davis also grew up to be an achiever, with wide-ranging accomplishments in business, civic, and political affairs. He is president of a mortgage investment company, director of a bank and several other businesses, president of the organization that manages the Tidewater Tides baseball team and former State Democratic Chairman.

Davis looks the part of southern politician. Tall, thickset, with white hair and blue eyes, he favors the lawyer-banker look in three-piece suits, and often smokes a pipe.

His manner is genial and easy-going, thought he has been described as autocratic and clearly was the major force in Portsmouth's government during his six years as mayor.

He is the type of man you would expect to have powerful political enemies, but people who have been associated with him over the years have little criticism to offer. Most are effusive in their praise, tossing out such phrases as "totally honest," "a super guy," "smarter than anyone else," "forceful," and "self-assured."

"His whole life is in this room," said Davis' wife Martha, waving her arms at the walls of the den of their waterfront home in Portsmouth's Sterling Point section.

Family pictures, photos with public figures, citations, awards, letters, and other mementos tell much about Davis' life.

After his father died, Davis and his mother were soon plunged into poverty. Fraternal groups brought them fruit baskets on holidays. A house his mother owned and rented out provided a small income. Young Davis helped by delivering morning and afternoon newspapers, working in a movie theatre at night, and selling peanuts and popcorn at baseball games.

In another quirk of fate, the boy who peddled peanuts later became president of the group that owned the franchise.

At 16, he graduated from Wilson High School, where knowing classmates voted him Most Likely to Succeed. While attending the College of William and Mary, Davis continued to hold multiple jobs, working as a waiter and night watchman, selling class rings, and operating a branch credit bureau for the Peninsula Retail Merchants Association.

He graduated in 1942, and was soon in the South Pacific with the Marines, where he made six landings, including ones at Okinawa, Saipan, and Tarawa.

Mrs. Davis proudly pointed to a framed letter on the wall which Davis wrote to his mother on Thanksgiving Day, 1943. She said she thinks it is typical that, even as a young Marine who had just survived the bloody battle of Tarawa, he was concerned about paying off a debt back home. "I think it would be a good idea to clear up the rest of the debt in Williamsburg at an early date," he wrote. He had left school owing $150, and wanted his mother to continue sending money from the allotment he sent her.

He is still paying back the college; he and his wife are endowing a scholarship there to be awarded to a deserving student from Portsmouth.

Davis assured his mother that he had gone to Mass every day aboard ship on the way to the "target area," and wrote that he would continue to do so.

He wrote that he was confident God would look out for him "as long as I try to do the right thing, and as long as you back home continue to pray for me."

He laughs recalling how, when he returned, his "typical Irish Catholic" mother looked at the young Marine Captain, who had just completed a stint as company commander responsible for the lives and well-being of 240 men, and told him, "Richard, you know the rules of this house; you be home by midnight."

Davis used his G.I. Bill benefits to attend law school at the University of Virginia, and organized a Marine Corps Reserve Company there.

"That later turned out to be a mistake," he said, because he was called up during the Korean War, though he did not go overseas. He retired from the reserves as a Lieutenant Colonel.

"His manner is genial and easy-going . . ."

After law school, he returned to Portsmouth and a few years later joined his boyhood friend, William B. Spong (later a U.S. Senator), to form Spong and Davis.

Davis remains an employee of the firm (now Cooper, Davis, Kilgore, Parker, Leon, and Fennell). Being an employee means the firm pays him a modest salary for a modest amount of work, he said.

In 1949, he married Jean McLean, daughter of George T. McLean, one of Portsmouth's most prominent citizens. That marriage produced one daughter, Jamie, and ended in divorce 16 years later.

He and Martha Whitfield married in 1967 and have two young children, Ashley, 10, and Richard III, 12. Because his father died when he was so young, Davis has never used the junior in his name.

Mrs. Davis, asked if she ever resents the time he spends in political and public ventures, said, "Of course I do at times. It's only normal."

Nonetheless, they manage to do "everything that a normal family does whose father is gone all the time," she said.

Asked what he does for recreation, Davis said, "I play with Martha and the children."

He said he enjoys taking the children to amusement parks such as Disneyworld and King's Dominion, and loves to bask in the sun at the beach. He also unwinds by watching sports such as Tides games. He is a spectator rather than a participant in sports.

"I enjoy what I do, and I think an active mind is as important as an active body," he said.

Though friends describe him as "a born politician," Davis is something of a late bloomer in politics. He was 52 when he made his first bid for public office in 1974. He had become well-known in the community for his involvement with sports and civic endeavors. In the mid-1960s, he was a leader among a group of Portsmouth businessmen who spent their own money to commission a study of the city. The study led to one financed by the state, which in turn, resulted in the forming of a community civic action group.

The group, known as Community Action, Inc., still exists today and is a viable organization interested in community improvement. Davis served as its first president, and was instrumental in implementing many of the group's original goals for Portsmouth.

Davis was "urged to run" for the office of Mayor in 1974 by many friends as well as members of the business community. His successful two-term tenure in that office was marked by an aggressive leadership, and by an imaginative and innovative revitalization program for Portsmouth. A solid team approach between the Mayor, City Council, staff and citizens was the guiding thrust which overnight gave Portsmouth national exposure, and brought national recognition such as the All-American City Award. Davis also successfully helped forge a positive attitude of metropolitan cooperation in Southeastern Virginia. For the first time in many years, local governments in that area discussed mutual concerns and implemented programs to better serve their citizens. Davis' philosophy, as stated so many times, was simple: "I live in Portsmouth, but I'm a resident of Tidewater."

Martha Davis, right, is a supporter of a "strong and united family." Shown with her, outside her husband's campaign headquarters are, son Richard III, the successful candidate, and daughter Ashley.

MARTHA WHITFIELD DAVIS

By Eva S. Teig

Martha Whitfield Davis is best known for her devotion to her family. Throughout her marriage to Dick Davis, she has been a supporter of a strong and united family, and during his many campaigns, she has, without hesitation, kept the family spirit together.

Dick's campaign for Lieutenant Governor was a real test for Martha's organizational skills. She took on campaign activities while continuing her many civic and community obligations, and her business and professional interests.

Martha and Dick were married in Mexico in November 1967, during the annual Winter Baseball Meetings. She and Dick were introduced by a mutual friend in Norfolk, and she said her immediate impression was, "I really didn't like him. He was so busy doing so many things." Of course, during their courtship, that first impression was replaced by a deep and long-lasting love which has never wavered.

A friend recalls meeting Martha and Dick in New York a few years ago. They were walking hand in hand talking quietly. The friend recalled that they looked like typical honeymooners, even though by then they had been married for several years.

In spite of Dick's extensive business and community involvement, Martha has managed to maintain a hectic schedule of business and social activities. She successfully juggles not only Dick's busy schedule, but those of her two very active children, Ashley and Richard III. Whether Dick travels for the Mortgage Bankers Association, or for scheduled appearances as was the case during his two years as State Democratic Party Chairman, Martha personally packs his suitcase. And, during his campaign for Lieutenant Governor, when he would be home for just a matter of hours, a second suitcase would be ready so that the one he had just used could be dropped off, and the new one picked up.

In fact, one of Martha's favorite campaign stories involves Dick's hectic schedule. Their dog, Snowball, was barking one night, and Martha got up to see what was causing the commotion. Snowball was barking at Dick, who was trying to get through the front door. Martha said, "I guess it had been so long since Snowball had seen him, he didn't recognize who Richard was." She added, "I had the same problem, myself."

Martha Davis is known for both her independence and great sense of humor. The Davis home in Portsmouth is filled with mementos of Dick and Martha's activities. She often prefaces her speeches by telling the audience what Dick has told her not to say, and laughingly tells humorous stories to illustrate her point. "Richard and I had been invited to the White House for lunch, but before leaving, knowing how outspoken I am, he gave me instructions not to ask for anything I didn't see. For instance, if there was no salt on the table, don't stop and ask for it. Well, do you know, I ate my whole meal without a knife." She can go on to tell hundreds of humorous stories, many of which have become well-known in Tidewater.

Dick's favorite story about Martha relates to the time he was being considered by President Carter for the position of Secretary of the Housing and Urban Development department. After a week of constant media publicity, the position was given to Moon Landrieu of New Orleans. Martha said to Dick, "You've flown with eagles for a whole week—now please, take out the garbage on your way out the door." Dick repeated that story to a Portsmouth Chamber of Commerce audience, and it received wide circulation in the local newspapers. He said then and will say now that Martha has a way of bringing him down to earth at the right times.

Her devotion to family, her sharp sense of humor, and her community activities sometimes hide the fact that Martha Davis is a very astute businesswoman. She is an officer and director of radio stations Q-104½ FM and WTJZ in Hampton Roads. She also serves as a director of Channel 33, WTVZ, which broadcasts from Norfolk.

She spends as much time as possible at the radio and t.v. stations, and is extremely familiar with every aspect of the operations. In fact, few people are aware that Martha has been an active businesswoman for many years.

Her business interests aside, if there is one characteristic which would best describe Martha, it would be her love of children. She is a strong advocate for special education programs for handicapped children, and served with distinction as a member of an advisory committee to the Portsmouth School Board for special education needs. She also participated annually in the sponsorship of the Special Olympics program. She serves on the board of the Children's Museum of Tidewater, and has participated in thousands of events involving children. Richard III is an avid surfer, and Martha has been to almost every surfing contest on the East Coast. She is a familiar sight in Virginia Beach during the summer where she is often seen on the beach bringing sandwiches to Richard and his friends. The children also enjoy snow skiing, and Martha often takes a carload of Richard III and Ashley's friends with them, to the mountains during the winter months.

Whether she is serving as President of the Maryview Hospital Auxiliary and raising money for Maryview Hospital, attending Channel 33 board meetings or taking a carload of children on a trip, Martha Davis is full of enthusiasm and vigor. She has the ability to adapt to any situation with good humor and grace.

She relishes the time spent with her family, and yet gives time to her many business and community activities. Her enthusiasm during Dick's two terms as Mayor of Portsmouth contributed greatly to his success and perseverance. She is always at his side, and during the long and arduous campaign for the office of Lieutenant Governor, she was a constant source of inspiration and encouragement.

This writer recalls a dinner with both Martha and Dick where he toasted her with these words: "Martha, you are the most beautiful lady in the world, and the most courageous. There's never a dull moment with you around, and I love you."

ATTORNEY GENERAL
OF THE

It was the weekend before the election, and for Jerry Baliles, Friday was another in a long, long list of before-dawn to long-after-dark days.

By sunset, after stops all across the Commonwealth, the Democratic candidate for Attorney General was in the home stretch. A cocktail party in Virginia Beach, then a quick run into Norfolk to meet the audience between acts at the opera. Then into Norfolk's Ghent, a last stop at a Halloween party.

"They were professional people, young lawyers, securities' analysts, people on the way up," Baliles told a friend later that evening. "When we came to the door in coat and tie and I introduced myself, they liked my 'costume,' pretending I was a candidate. They were a little unusual, but they seemed to like us, and I met everyone there."

That last Friday in October may tell the story of how Baliles upset Republican Wyatt Durrette, when Durrette appeared to be the strongest candidate on the November ballot, when Durrette outspent his Democratic opponent by more than $100,000, and had the endorsements of President Reagan, nine Virginia Congressmen, Governor Dalton and former Governor Mills Godwin.

Baliles started before dawn most days, criss-crossing the state, and in most areas, "People seemed to like us." He had started the race almost a year before, along the way picking up the party nomination in a tough fight with Delegate Erwin Solomon of Bath County, one which some observers thought Baliles could not win because of Solomon's early start.

Democratic candidate Baliles had built a reputation in the Attorney General's office and later in the General Assembly as a tireless worker, a detail man, who did his homework. But in most of the state, he was a political unknown, even though his six years as a delegate from Richmond had garnered high marks from other legislators and newspaper rating polls.

State Democratic Chairman Owen Pickett, who served with Baliles in the legislature, had warned reporters not to take Baliles for granted, not to overlook the scholarly-looking attorney from Richmond.

"He is the sleeper in this race," Pickett insisted. "He's the best campaigner in this race, and if he can meet enough voters, he can win, he can beat Durrette."

How did Baliles put the win together, and where did he find the strength, political, financial and personal, to complete the first Democratic sweep since 1965?

When Durrette put together a high-priced campaign staff of paid professionals, Baliles for the most part staffed his headquarters and local offices with a blend of political newcomers and volunteers. When Durrette depended on media advertising and the endorsements of highly placed Republicans, Baliles countered with advertisements produced by his campaign manager, Darrel Martin of Newport, and a carefully planned non-stop schedule.

In retrospect, it may appear that Baliles' success was matter of course, almost foreordained. But at each step of the way, Baliles had to fight his way over tough obstacles, roadblocks that would have brought most men to a standstill.

He was born in rural Patrick County July 8th, 1940, but his family soon moved to Washington. Six years later, his parents' marriage failed and Baliles, with two younger brothers, returned to his grandparents' home in Patrick County. He was raised by his father's family, by a grandfather he describes as a man with "very strict discipline, a strong belief in the work ethic." His grandfather was a farmer and orchardist, an old time conservative Democrat, and while Baliles admittedly never shared his grandfather's passion for farm work, the signs of that austere childhood of discipline, personal integrity, and a belief in the work ethic still mark the new Attorney General.

Jerry's brother, Larry, thirteen months younger, and now chief deputy sheriff in Patrick County, recalls that Jerry's disinterest in farm chores led the boys to squirt each other while milking cows, to plant rocks instead of potatoes, and wonder what happened when potatoes were due.

But Baliles, and his younger brother Stuart, now a missionary in Africa, found time for a new interest, and it was to prove a consuming passion. They began to read, and to read in such breadth and depth that a story grew that Jerry read every book in the county library. That wasn't literally true, but the Baliles' farm was the only private home in the county regularly visited by the bookmobile, and when the maximum number of books wasn't enough, he asked his brothers and their friends to check out books for him.

Recalling those times, Baliles says he had very little idle time on the farm, but time enough to read, and to decide, very early, "I wanted something more challenging."

His brother remembers when that happened. "In the fifth, sixth, and seventh grades, he did become more studious," Larry recalled. "He just didn't seem to be getting what he wanted in the elementary school here."

When Baliles was 15, he transferred to Fishburne Military School in Waynesboro, to prepare for the Air Force Academy. But something happened to his military plans in the academy atmosphere.

Baliles says the dean of students at Fishburne began the change. Major Edward L. Henson, Jr. "taught us to read and be prepared to talk about world affairs, to be ready at a moment's notice to discuss changing events on a global scale."

The training paid off, when he won an international public speaking competition in Canada while a student at Fishburne.

He was president of the Key Club, editor of the newspaper, and leader of the corp of cadets.

He finished second in his class at Fishburne in 1959, while playing football and basketball, and running track.

After his classmates selected him most educational, most versatile, and most studious cadet, predictably enough, he was also voted most likely to succeed.

By then, Baliles had changed his plans, and the Air Force Academy was supplanted by hopes for a strong liberal arts education.

He narrowed his choice of colleges to five, including the University of Virginia and Washington and Lee University. But Baliles said he wanted a change of perspective, a broadening of his rural Southern roots.

He subsequently narrowed his choices to Yale and Wesleyan University, in Middletown, Connecticut. In the end, the smallness of Wesleyan won out over the bigness of Yale and he enrolled in the class of '63, a government major with law school in his future.

On the farm in Patrick County, the work ethic did not include an appreciation of all the values of higher education. Baliles went to Wesleyan, one of the most expensive of the Eastern liberal arts universities, with $100 in his pocket. That is a story he does not volunteer. But friends relate that the young freshman needed to work to make his way, that he truly made it on his own.

"For a Southerner, Wesleyan was a new world," his wife recalls. "It forced Jerry to look at the world differently."

It was at Wesleyan that Baliles met his future wife. Jeannie Patterson was a graduate student, another Southerner in New England, and the friendship blossomed. They were married just weeks before his first year in law school at the University of Virginia.

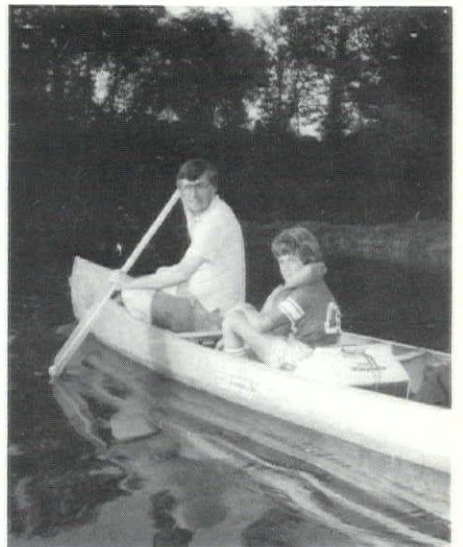

Those three years of law school were typical of what has become the Baliles mold: long hours, interest in concepts, yet a constant attention to detail, and a growing circle of friends. He was graduated in 1967, and immediately moved to a new challenge, this time in state government.

He went to work in the Virginia Attorney General's office. In 1967, the Attorney General was Robert Y. Button, and the office was much like a small country law firm. But in two years that changed.

In 1969, Andrew Pickens Miller was elected Attorney General, and the country firm became a big city operation, and an aggressive one. For five years, Baliles, under Button, and then Miller, handled a variety of cases, including a number of criminal actions in federal and state courts in Virginia.

In 1972, that too changed, when Baliles, only five years out of law school, became a Deputy Attorney General, and was placed in charge of the new field of energy and environmental law. That promotion surfaced during the campaign for Attorney General, when Durette accused Baliles of deserting criminal law, of a lack of interest in crime. Baliles describes the move differently, as a promotion and a chance for increased pay, important for a married man with two young children.

In 1975, Baliles was ready to move out on his own. He left the Attorney General's office and entered private practice. At the same time, he entered politics, a race for a House of Delegates seat held by political maverick Howard Carwile. Although many political observers gave Baliles little chance of defeating the highly visible and well-known incumbent, he won, rather easily, with a better than ten percent margin.

Six years later, in 1981, Baliles launched his bid for the Attorney General's office.

Baliles promised a reorganization of the office, a promise kept in December, when he divided the staff into four broad areas of specialization, much like the format of a large private law firm.

He promised local input into his anti-crime package, a pledge kept by the reports from his ACT/Virginia volunteer teams. He promised that the Attorney General's office would work closely with the Governor, the Legislature and the public, and as soon as the election results were tabulated, he began work.

Baliles follows Marshall Coleman as Attorney General, a man whose style was frankly described as confrontational. It's unlikely that Baliles will continue that style, or will duplicate the politically based events of his predecessor.

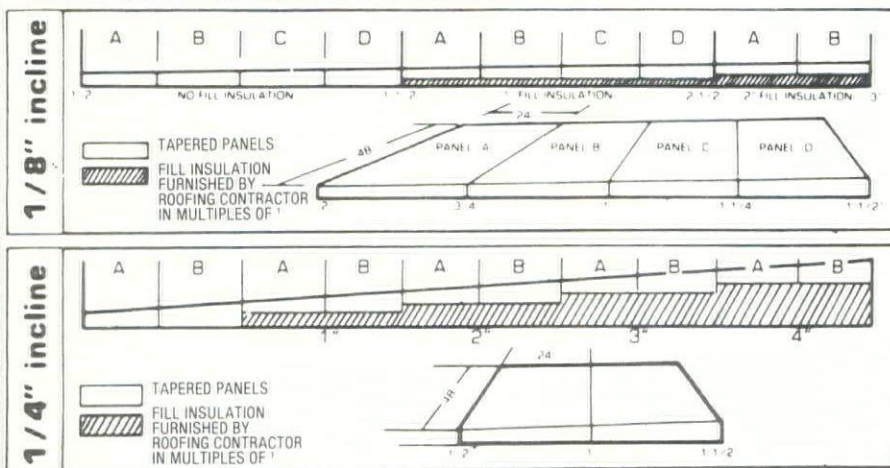

"Jerry likes to anticipate problems," his wife explained, "and solve them before they become big. He doesn't need confrontation, he solves them before they become confrontations."

JEANNIE PATTERSON BALILES

By David Hathcock

"I think the campaign has been important for the children. Being involved in a statewide race, they met different people, individuals from different areas, different kinds of life, and it has helped them grow. They've learned to appreciate people they wouldn't have otherwise met."

Jeannie Patterson Baliles was sitting with her feet under her on the family's sun porch a few days after the election, telling a visitor about a year long race for the Virginia Attorney General's office. Delegate Gerald L. Baliles had eked out a 27,000-vote margin over Republican Wyatt Durrette, who had outspent Baliles by $100,000, and had generally been considered the toughest Republican campaigner in the race.

It had been a long campaign for all the Baliles family. Jeannie had spent three or four days a week on the road during the last two months of the race.

Laura, who was 13 shortly after the election, had substituted for her mother at a formal affair in Richmond's West End. And 11-year-old Jonathan had licked stamps, stuffed envelopes and "put a Baliles sticker on every car in this Republican neighborhood," according to his mother.

Mrs. Baliles admits that the long campaign has kept husband and family apart more than she liked. But she is quick to point out that when Jerry was home, he brought the same concentration, the same energy to family affairs that he brought to the campaign.

"The quality of the time we spent together has been very important. Jerry has made sure that the kids knew what was happening every step of the way," she said.

A family friend relates that a few days before the election, Baliles sat down with the family and told them that while he expected to win, the issue was in doubt, that he might not win, that they must be prepared.

For Jeannie Baliles, the warning was appreciated, but probably unnecessary. She says that her first meeting with Jerry, across a dinner table at Wesleyan University in Connecticut, wasn't love at first sight. But she was impressed by the senior government student, impressed enough that they were married two years later, after she found a job teaching in Charlottesville. "If I hadn't found that job, we couldn't have gotten married."

Jeannie had gone to college at Washington College, on Maryland's Eastern Shore, and had pursued a Master's degree at Wesleyan. "Wesleyan has long enjoyed a reputation for being a truly liberal arts college, a college where you are not only exposed to the arts, to the great thinkers of the past and present, but are also challenged to think. We were interested in social concerns, in the great issues of the day."

Those issues stayed with Jeannie after she left Wesleyan. She taught for five years after her marriage—Government and History in high schools in Maryland, in the Charlottesville area, and the Richmond area, after Jerry moved to the Attorney General's office in 1967. "I loved getting back into the classroom during the campaign. I enjoyed the repartee, the give and take with students."

Social concerns still move her today. She is President of the Board of Directors at the Memorial Guidance Clinic, a United Way agency located in Richmond's Church Hill. The psychiatric outpatient clinic works with emotionally disturbed children. "It's so important," she says, "to see the change that time and attention can make in the lives of those disturbed children. They come from all over the Central Virginia area. It takes so much time, but the result is worth it. If we care about such things, we can make a difference."

She is also active as a member of the prestigious Maymont Foundation, which oversees Maymont Park; and she works actively in the local Democratic Woman's Club.

But life for Jeannie Baliles still centers around the family home on Custis Road in the Stratford Hills subdivision south of the James River. "People have asked me about my home schedule after a campaign swing. First, I would hug the kids, then do six loads of laundry, the grocery shopping, and check on what had to be done in the yard. Then, I would find time for tennis.

"This campaign," she notes, "has really been good for Laura and Jonathan. They've really matured, and assumed additional responsibilities around the house. They've helped with entertaining and meetings in the home. They have packed their lunches, worked in the yard, and even made a deal to keep the grass cut on a regular basis."

The yard may be Jeannie Baliles' special project. Spread over acres of steeply wooded hillside, it is covered with trees and shrubs. "When things get tense, the yard is one outlet." The other is tennis, a sport at which she plays with zest and much success as a member of a suburban women's tennis team.

Mrs. Baliles has still found time to work on one more special project. Every winter, in February and March, she teaches a three-week short course in Virginia Government at Richmond's St. Catherine's School. "We visit the General Assembly; we arrange meetings with the Governor and Legislators; we attend committee meetings and floor sessions, study issues as well as the legislative process. In short, we try to give the students an insight into how the system works. It's a good experience for students."

Would she teach again?

"I would love to return to the classroom, but it would be impossible right now. There are just too many other requirements competing for my time and attention."

Jeannie Baliles appears to have one thing in common with the wives of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor. Just as Lynda Robb and Martha Davis, she is very much her own woman, with a life of her own. And she intends to continue that life. "There is nothing I want to do that being the wife of the Attorney General helps with. The things I want to do need me, not the wife of the Attorney General."

But the wife of the Attorney General will have one different problem. Baliles was a partner in a prosperous Richmond law firm, that he will now leave. His salary as Attorney General will be a fraction of his private earnings.

Jeannie Baliles, who says she pays the bills, doesn't flinch. "We'll have enough. We have never cared about some of the more expensive possessions of life. We want enough to be comfortable. The quality of our lives lies in what we do, not what we have."

How does she react to suggestions from her new-found political friends that Baliles might run for Governor?

"I don't think Jerry feels that he must do it. I think he feels that he must do the best he can as Attorney General. You don't know just how interested he is in that office. He really wants to make it work, to make it more effective, and more efficient."

That might also be a description of Jeannie Patterson Baliles: to be effective, to be efficient, to make things work better.

Woodlawn Plantation Needlework Exhibit March 6 Through March 28, 1981 Open To All Stitchers

Attention all needleworkers! You are invited to enter your handiwork in the 19th Annual Needlework Exhibit at historic Woodlawn Plantation.

Men, women, and children are eligible to compete for ribbons. All types of work hand sewn with a needle are eligible. Knitting, crocheting, Bunka work, and hooked pieces are not eligible.

All proceeds go to Woodlawn Plantation, which was George Washington's wedding gift to his wife's granddaughter, Nelly Custis, and his nephew, Lawrence Lewis. Mrs. Lewis was an ardent needleworker and there are many pieces of her work in the Woodlawn collection. A special feature of this year's exhibit will be a display of stitchery related to the Washington family.

This popular exhibit, which last year drew some 15,000 visitors, will be open to the public March 6 through March 28, 1982. The exhibit will be judged by Doris Bowman, needlework and lace specialist at the Smithsonian Institution; Margaret Gilman, Editor, McCall's Needlework and Craft Magazine; Hope Hanley, well-known author, teacher, and expert in the field of needlework; Christine Meadows, Curator of Mount Vernon; and Ginne Thompson, one of the foremost authorities on counted cross stitch.

For additional information and entry blanks, call or write Woodlawn Plantation, P.O. Box 37, Mount Vernon, Virginia 22121-0037, (703) 557-7881. Woodlawn Plantation is a house museum owned and maintained by the National Trust for Historic Preservation.

ROLAND SPECTER
1982 HBAV President

25-Year-Old HBAV Holds Triple Celebration

• The Home Builders Association of Virginia, a statewide trade group representing more than 4,000 members and firms and 23 local associations, held a triple celebration Nov. 20 at the Williamsburg Hilton and National Conference Center.

The association chose that date to celebrate its 25th anniversary (the actual charter date was Oct. 8, 1956) and install its 1982 officers as well as present the association's annual "Builder of the Year" and "Associate of the Year" awards. Many of the association's past presidents and even a few founding members were on hand for the formal dinner event.

President-elect of the National Association of Home Builders Fred Napolitano of Virginia Beach was on hand to install the new officers. Napolitano himself will be installed as president of the 123,000-plus member national association during the national convention in Las Vegas this January.

Taking over the leadership of HBAV for 1982 was Roland Specter, a Petersburg builder/developer. Specter has been an active member of the association since 1958 when he joined the HBA of Southside Virginia. He has twice served as president of his local association and has headed numerous committees on both the state and local levels. He has served on the board of directors of the local, state and national associations for a number of years and will become a Life Director of the national association at the end of next year. He was named Outstanding Builder Member by HBAV for 1966-67, and having served three years as HBAV's representative to the national association he received the distinguished service award for national representatives. He has also served as HBAV's secretary, treasurer and vice president, and was himself the recipient of a presidential award this year for his service to the association.

Specter's civic accomplishments are equally as outstanding. He has served as both president and chairman of the United Way of Southside Virginia, served on the board of directors six years, and headed the construction division twice. He is on the advisory board of First & Merchants National Bank in Petersburg and is a past member and chairman of the Petersburg Planning Commission. He served on the Crater Planning District Commission and Petersburg's Equalization Board and has been chairman of the Tri-Cities Transportation Committee.

In 1974, Specter was elected to Petersburg's city council. He was made vice mayor the same year, and in 1976 became mayor.

He has served two terms as development council chairman of Petersburg General Hospital and is a commissioner of the city's Hospital Authority.

He is a member of the Retail Merchants Association and the Petersburg Chamber of Commerce and is currently serving his second term as president of the Appomattox Basin Industrial Development Corp.

Other officers installed that evening were Randolph R. Rinehart, David A. Howard and Myron P. Erkiletian.

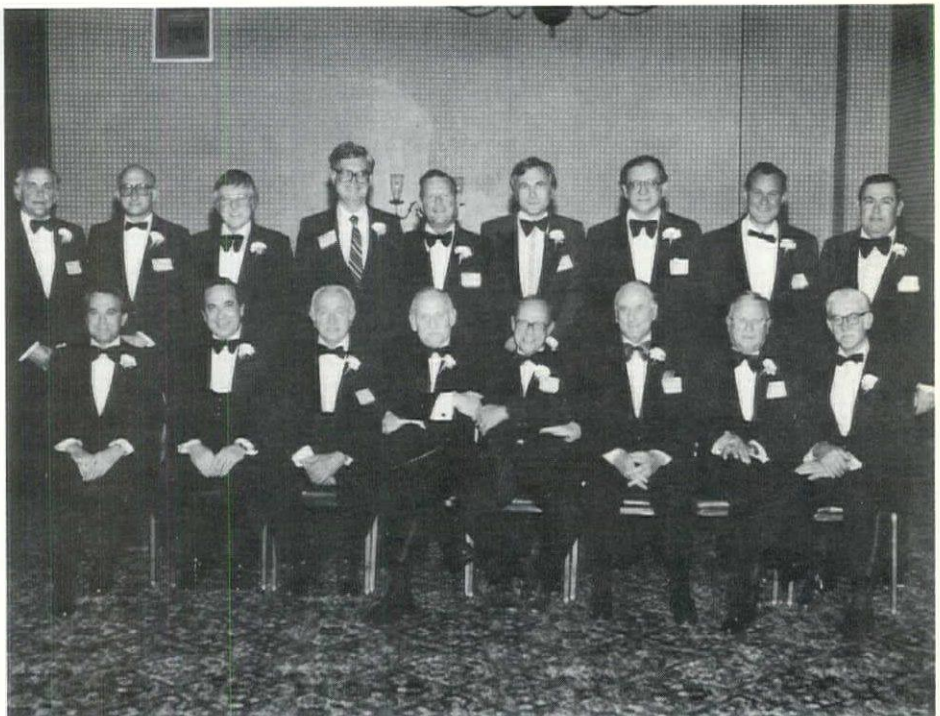

Rinehart is a Charlottesville area builder and realtor and president of Development Corporation of Virginia. He will serve as the association's vice president for 1982.

Howard, president and owner of Rainbow Concepts Inc., a successful Virginia Beach realty and construction company, will serve as the association's treasurer, and Erkiletian, a Northern Virginia builder/developer and owner and president of Erkiletian Construction Corp. in Alexandria, will serve as secretary.

Winning the association's "Builder of the Year" award for 1981 was H. Marshall Hamilton of Lynchburg. Hamilton is general manager of the J. B. Forehand Co., a firm which builds single- and multi-family residential and develops shopping centers. Hamilton received the award for exceeding ordinary expectations of time and effort devoted to the association. He has worked for a number of years on the HBAV legislative committee and this year also served as co-chairman of the HBAV State Governmental Affairs Committee, two of the association's most demanding committees.

Commonwealth Land Title Insurance Co. received HBAV's "Associate of the Year" award for 1981. Founded in Philadelphia in 1876, the company is the oldest title insurance company in the nation. The association recognized Commonwealth as associate of the year for its continuous support of the annual HBAV Builders' Institute, a continuing educational program for members of the industry.

HBAV has been fortunate to have had capable and dedicated leadership throughout its 25 years of service. Pictured above are 17 of HBAV's past presidents as they posed for this photograph at the association's 25th Anniversary Celebration in Williamsburg, Nov. 20. Standing, left to right, are Glen Hastings, Daley Craig, Woodrow Sirois, Don Cleckley, Neal Barnes, Herman Blake, Ted Schlossman, Clarke Jones Jr., and Lamar Jolly. Seated, left to right, are Maury Strauss, Fred Napolitano, Lee Gifford, Elbert Waldron, Marshall Johnson, Tom Carey, Mike Bogese Sr., and Henry Steigleder. Napolitano, seated, second from left, will serve as 1982 president of the 123,000-member National Association of Home Builders.

Volunteer Developers Honored

• Seven Virginians were recognized, September 30, for their volunteer efforts which resulted in the establishment of new manufacturing plants in their communities during the year.

Volunteer of the Year Awards were presented to one statewide winner and six regional winners by George Woodall, Virginia Director of the Southern Industrial Development Council and Maurice Rowe, then Secretary of Commerce and Resources for the Commonwealth.

The presentations were made during the Virginia Division of Industrial Development's quarterly seminar in Richmond. The annual awards program is coordinated between Virginia members of the SIDC and the Virginia Division of Industrial Development.

Selection of the winners was based on the time and effort expended by the nominees in securing new industrial plants and the degree of difficulty to be overcome in locating the plants.

A panel of judges was appointed by State SIDC Director Woodall to select the seven winners. Serving on the judges' panel were Edwin Holm, Assistant Director for Planning, Virginia Division of Industrial Development; Joseph G. Gray, Manager, Atlantic States Public Affairs, General Electric Company; and James S. Watkinson, President, Morton G. Thalheimer, Inc.

Winners of the 1980 Volunteer of the Year Award were:

Statewide Winner

D'Earcy P. (Red) Davis, Jr. of Harrisonburg who was named statewide winner. Mr. Davis was cited for his role in locating the R. R. Donnelly and Sons printing plant in Rockingham County, which created over 300 new jobs for the area. He is the founder of the Rockingham Development Corporation, and has served as president of the corporation since 1959. Mr. Davis is an architect, and president of Davis and Associates, an architectural firm in Harrisonburg.

Regional Winners

Perry G. Davis of Hillsville was recognized for his efforts in locating the Long Airdox Corporation in Hillsville. The new 52,000 square foot plant will employ 200 people at full operation. Mr. Davis is Chairman of the Carroll County Industrial Development Authority and Director and past president of the Carroll County-Galax-Grayson County Chamber of Commerce. In Hillsville he is vice president and manager of the Virginia National Bank.

Herbert S. Sumney of Leesburg was cited for his role in fourteen economic development projects during 1980 which resulted in a combined investment of $31 million in Loudoun County. Mr. Sumney was instrumental in the creation of the Loudoun County Industrial Development Authority, and has served as chairman since its inception in 1972. In Leesburg Mr. Sumney is the owner of Broad Run, a real estate firm.

Paul H. Wood of Charlottesville was selected for his activities in establishing the Greater Charlottesville Area Economic Development Corporation, serving the city of Charlottesville, and the counties of Albemarle, Greene, Fluvanna, Louisa and Nelson. In addition, Mr. Wood was cited for his assistance in three major plant expansions which resulted in combined investments of over $30 million. In Charlottesville, Mr. Wood is president of the Hill and Wood Funeral Home.

William E. Confroy of Halifax was chosen for his role in locating Presto Products, Inc., a plastics manufacturer which created over 150 new jobs in the community. Mr. Confroy is chairman of the Industrial Development Committee of the Halifax County Chamber of Commerce, and a member of the Halifax County Industrial Commission and the Halifax County Industrial Development Authority. Mr. Confroy is vice president and senior executive officer of the Central Fidelity Bank in Halifax.

James Grzesek of Fredericksburg was recognized for activities which resulted in the location of Tinby AS, a Danish firm, in Stafford County's Falls Run Industrial Park. Mr. Grzesek is a member of the Stafford County Industrial Development Authority. During 1980 he served as vice president of the Stafford County Chamber of Commerce Community Development Council. Mr. Grzesek is Plant Manager of European Parts Exchange in Fredericksburg.

Edwin A. Joseph of Newport News was selected for his efforts in establishing the Virginia Peninsula Economic Development Council to market the cities of Williamsburg, Newport News, Poquoson and Hampton, and the counties of James City, York and Gloucester. Mr. Joseph has served as Assistant Treasurer of the Progress Committee for Newport News and as Secretary of the Regional Redevelopment and Housing Authority. In Newport News, Mr. Joseph is president of Great Atlantic Agency, a real estate management firm.

Not All Power Financings Are Alike

Variety characterizes Public Power in the United States. Public Power is a multitude of utilities each with its own particular identity, each with its own particular financing requirements. Only an investment banker with the depth and breadth of staff, experienced in all phases of Public Power financing, can satisfy these requirements.

Experience. Since 1977 First Boston has managed over $12 billion or 40% of the total Public Power bonds issued during this period. First Boston's experience in Public Power financing includes issues for large and complex statewide joint action agencies (Municipal Electric Authority of Georgia), authorities with wholesale and retail sales (Nebraska Public Power District), individual city systems (Jonesboro, Arkansas), and small and full scale hydroelectric projects (The City of Hope, Arkansas and the Alaska Power Authority).

Innovation. As financial advisor to Sikeston, Missouri, First Boston designed a financing program which gave the city the economic advantages of a joint action power project while enabling the city to own its own long-term generation facility.

Commitment. First Boston has demonstrated its willingness and ability to commit its human and capital resources to the successful completion of a client's financing program. This commitment to its clients results in longstanding professional/client relationships: since 1974 First Boston has senior managed 10 financings for the Nebraska Public Power District aggregating in excess of $1.3 billion, and since 1977 First Boston has senior managed 9 financings for the Municipal Electric Authority of Georgia aggregating in excess of $1.2 billion.
