From the publisher

From the center outward

It is especially gratifying after a wicked recession and during the 100th anniversary of the Virginia AIA to note that membership continues to be at record highs. Incorporated into Inform magazine twenty or so years ago, the directory of membership now in your hands speaks well of the spirit of collective energies that continues within the profession.

Heaven knows, that spirit of joint effort is as necessary as it's ever been for the profession of architecture. In this centennial year, as I review both decades of meeting minutes as well as developments within the profession over the 28 years of my tenure with the Virginia Society, I am struck by the increasing complexity of the environments in which architectural practice takes place.

In 1986 (and indeed for quite a few years after that time), many of our members were still worrying over decisions about abandoning drawing boards to take up with CAD; the Society's official advocacy position about delivery methods was "Design-Bid-Build," and we aggressively opposed early efforts to introduce Design-Build, as an alternative approach to our carefully protected Virginia Public Procurement Act, that was just gaining a toe-hold at the Federal level. "Construction management" was a term yet to be coined, so far as mainstream practice in Virginia was concerned.

Rapid developments in technology; increasingly fragmented construction management; complicated procurement methods; ever-present pressure on fee structures; ever-higher costs of higher education. On and on, professional life doesn't get any simpler. But the American Institute of Architects, created by architects for positive, collective protection and advancement of their profession — and of their individual places within the profession — lasts.

It is yours. You are it.

Farm to Table: American Silver

On view through October 5, 2014

This exhibition presents handmade American silver objects from the last 150 years, showcasing the beauty of these functional works of art over the ages. The included pieces highlight the sculptural forms afforded by the medium and craft of silver while visually and chronologically telling the story of our food and farms. Through the impressive variety of objects on display, Farm to Table captures modified uses and changing styles of silver, from antique serving pieces to iconic Arts and Crafts, Art Deco, and mid-century Modern designs.

Andrew Wyeth: Looking Out, Looking In

On View through November 30, 2014

The window—an integral element of architecture—now stands at the center of an exhibition at the National Gallery of Art. Celebrated artist Andrew Wyeth completed hundreds of technically masterful watercolors, drawings, and tempera paintings with a window as his subject. This exhibition gathers together for the first time a select group of 60 of these images of windows held in museum and private collections. The architectural settings and landscapes beyond offer a unique look at the artist and the American scenes he captured through his spare yet complex compositions.

Multiplicity

On view through August 17, 2014

Organized by the Smithsonian American Art Museum and drawn from its permanent collection, this exhibition brings together a selection of prints showcasing American artists' use of multiplicity in concept and in process. The exploration of repetition, pairing, and variations on a theme has long been a part of printmaking and continues to raise questions of rarity and individuality as determinants of value. Standouts from the more than 80 prints include a Chuck Close self-portrait and hand drawn prints by Modernist Sol LeWitt.

The Daywood Collection

On view through November 2, 2014

This exhibition is a must-see for fans of 19th and 20th century American art. The Daywoods are renowned for amassing works by academically trained American artists from the mid-19th century up to 1940, including Childe Hassam and Frank Benson. The collection also includes masterpieces from members of “The Eight,” credited as the first generation of early American Modernists. Seventy works curated from this exquisite collection, gifted to the Huntington Museum of Art, showcase the subjects, styles, qualities, and aesthetics of significant American artists.

The LOVE artwork came to the VCA to celebrate the announcement of Virginia's Favorite Architecture. Visitors explore the interactive exhibition. The map below from the exhibition identifies many unique facts about the 100 structures selected.

"Keeping in mind that favorite doesn't necessarily mean best, the results make it clear that we forge deep personal connections to architecture," says Virginia Center for Architecture Executive Director Helene Combs Dreiling, FAIA; "Buildings that hold sentimental value for us are just as meaningful as those that are considered to hold great architectural or historical significance."

Designing for Net-Zero Energy and Raising the Bar

by Jennifer Pullinger

Virginia Beach is one of the most popular getaway destinations in America, but many people make the resort area their home year-round. Yet homeowners know that when you live in the Tidewater region, any new construction or renovation must abide by the Chesapeake Bay Preservation Act, created to protect the bay's water quality. In 2008, Patrick Farley, LEED BD+C of Watershed Architects in Richmond, Va., was hired to transform a 1960s-era ranch house on a bay tributary — the Lynnhaven River — into an ecologically sustainable, energy-efficient residence that raised the bar for what a high-performance home could be.

Farley's client had two specific goals in mind for her home rebuild: it had to support her physical disability and it had to be as "green" as possible. "In fact, she set the agenda that she wanted to achieve a LEED Platinum certification before it was all said and done," says Farley. "So we had two major drivers: the need for Universal Design and a high degree of ecological performance and integrity."

Watershed Architects took a design-build approach, completing the project in 2012. In addition to achieving the goal of Platinum certification under LEED™ for Homes, the residence received the best HERS (Home Energy Rating System) score possible. Designed as a net-zero energy building, the house is capable of producing more energy than it consumes, realized primarily through solar energy enhancements, rain water harvest systems, passive survivability, and bioclimatic design.

Occupying the footprint of a 1966 rancher, the Lynnhaven River House's resilient design allows the structure and occupants to bounce back quickly in the event of a natural disaster.

"In this case, our micro-climate is waterfront, coastal. It gets hot and humid. There are wind issues. We are in a hurricane zone, so we designed this house to resist a category five hurricane," says Farley.

Ecologically restorative design measures include rain gardens and vegetative buffers. More than half of the roof area on the house is also vegetated. "The rest of it, or at least the south face of the remaining roof, is actually a solar power plant," says Farley. "Most of the building's covering — the envelope that's covering it — is either an ecosystem or a power plant."

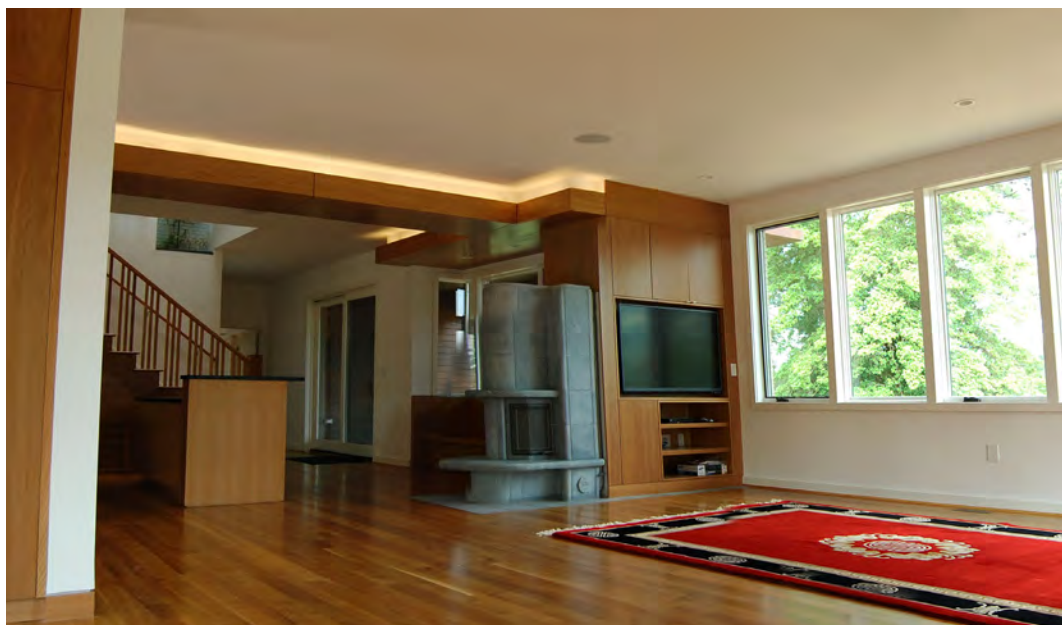

In the event of an energy breakdown, the home has built-in power redundancy. “The solar plant actually has battery banks. In addition to battery banks, we have a generator that runs off the city gas supply, so the generator backs up the batteries,” he says. A 1,400 gallon underground cistern tied to the city’s water system adds to the building’s resilience. “We’ve even incorporated a vegetable garden for food production on one side of the property,” says Farley. “So if you think about energy, water, food... it’s the idea that a building is designed to not only withstand extreme weather conditions but to actually support survival, at least to a point, following any kind of disaster.”

A biophilic sensibility, where architecture responds to the innate biological affinity of humans to connect with nature, was another layer in the project’s design. “The house is intended to facilitate health through its connections to natural systems, which are literally integrated into the building” says Farley.

The technologically savvy home now sets the bar for how a healthy home — whether vacation or permanent — should be built. “That was part of our intention going into this project, to set a standard, bring awareness to strategies and approaches that one could take to build, frankly, a high-end home,” says Farley. “In fact, I would think if you are building a vacation home you would be even more apt to take this approach.”

More than half of the roof’s surface is vegetated. Expansive windows offer a view overlooking the river.

OUT OF THE Park

BY
J. MICHAEL WELTON

IN CHARLOTTE'S THIRD WARD, BB&T BALLPARK IS PACKING THE STANDS AND GROWING A NEIGHBORHOOD.

A snazzy new Triple-A ballpark in uptown Charlotte, N.C. is proving that baseball is more than just a game. Sure, BB&T Ballpark offers the standard three bases and a home plate. And yes, the Charlotte Knights do play with wooden bats and regulation baseballs, their seams bearing the requisite 108 double stitches. And absolutely, their mascot – a carrot-topped, lime-green dragon named Homer – takes the field for every game.

But this is a ballpark that's also dedicated to creating a walkable community and a work/play environment in a brand new neighborhood. It was designed that way that from the get-go.

"It's the long-term vision of the 1970s and '80s, plus a major shift in psychographics," says Michael Smith, president and CEO of Charlotte Center City Partners, a private, non-profit that's been around since the late '70s. "People have changed – it's a cyclical shift."

It didn't happen overnight, nor was it without controversy. Odell, the hometown architecture firm responsible for the 1955 Charlotte Coliseum – a design that once graced the cover of LOOK magazine and that still stands today – began its ballpark visioning process a decade ago. The firm had already created the city's master plan back in the 1960s, so its selection to do the same for the ballpark was a natural.

Odell worked hand-in-glove with the City of Charlotte, Mecklenburg County, the Charlotte Center City Partners, and its client, the Charlotte Knights baseball team. A patient group, they were slowed first by seven lawsuits from a proponent of Major League Baseball for the city, and then by the Great Recession.

But they broke ground in September 2012, and by April 11, 2014, the ballpark was ready for opening night. Almost simultaneously, a 22-story apartment building was under construction, catty-corner from the main entry at Mint Street and Martin Luther King Boulevard. Now that it is topped out, a hotel and offices are planned beyond left field, along with a mid-rise and another high-rise.

"It's definitely stimulating that part of town," says Michael Woollen, managing partner at Odell.

It's happening on a site where, not long ago, a series of gravel parking lots languished. "It was a two-block-wide no-man's land," he says. "It was the only remaining undeveloped piece downtown - I thought it was perfect because we already had the football stadium and it was across from a new park."

Addressing two main streets and a public park, the main entrance plaza is a gathering point for Charlotte's new neighborhood.

Directly opposite that park – named for Romare Bearden, the African-American artist and writer who was a Charlotte native – now lies an open-air plaza in front of the ballpark's main entry. "It's a good, strong connection to a signature public park, where the symphony performs on Saturday," Woollen says.

The new neighborhood in Charlotte's southwest quadrant started to come together in 2005, when a complex set of land swaps between the city, the county, the local school board, Wachovia Bank, and Mass Mutual jump-started development in Third Ward. "That gave us the two city blocks to build it," Woollen says.

Charlotte City Partners had already conducted a public ballpark site selection study and shared it with city and county officials, also in 2005. "We really set it all in motion with the five-acre signature park and 1,000 units of housing underway, creating that neighborhood," Smith says.

But Third Ward's beating heart is the ballpark's spectacular view of Charlotte's downtown, wrapped around the entire outfield. "The batters are oriented away from the sun, and yet the fans have this great backdrop behind the playing surface, looking up at the Charlotte skyline," Smith says. "I think it's one of the best in the world – and it's as good a spot to sell our city as any."

The ballpark is bordered by Mint Street on the east, Graham Street on the west, Fourth Street on the north, and

"THIRD WARD'S BEATING HEART IS THE BALLPARK'S SPECTACULAR VIEW OF CHARLOTTE'S DOWNTOWN."

Fencing and other elements of the ballpark's design don't obstruct the view; they serve as an invitation to passersby to engage with the game.

Martin Luther King Boulevard on the south. Also to the south is a strategic bonus: Duke Energy's parking garage, which has long served patrons of Carolina Panthers games, and now, Charlotte Knights fans as well. "We built no parking, and there are no issues with parking," Smith says. "And there are virtual sellouts to every game."

Its people-moving capabilities are complaint-free, says Dan Rajkowski, the Knights' general manager. Crowds are late-arriving, and begin filtering out starting in the seventh inning. Once the game is over, the ballpark is empty in 15 minutes.

Many of those fans, some arriving on the city's light rail system, walk to and from the games. "During the week, it may be 20 to 25 percent," Rajkowski says. "At quarter to seven, I can stand up on the home run porch in right field and see people walking from the park and the streets."

Even with its 10,400-seat, standing-room-only sellouts, the sides of the ballpark are opened up via see-through fences to life on the street, so action inside is clearly visible outside. An 18-foot by 32-foot video screen is mounted on Mint Street, offering pedestrians bigger views of the games. The idea is not to close the ballpark off, but to make it integral to Charlotte's urban fabric.

"From Graham Street there are some knotholes to watch it, the way my father used to watch the Yankees," Smith says. "And at some of the games, the uptown fire department pulls up and sits on top of their truck to watch.”

Inside, it’s intimate – only 21 rows of 8,400 fixed seats, with a second-tier club and suite level. There is standing room on grass berm seating, and picnic tables as well. A series of covered concourses and open walkways – fans can walk the 1,700 feet around the entire ballpark in about ten minutes – offer, concessions food courts, drink rails, restaurants, a Home Run Court in right field, and a Home Plate Club with indoor terraces.

“Behind home plate there are two suites at the same level as the dugout, so your eyes are at same level as the catcher squatting down,” Woollen says. “You’re closer to the batter than the pitcher is – about 45 to 50 feet.”

It yields an outstanding view of the game – with left field at 330 feet, a power alley at 375 feet, center field at 400 feet, and right field at 315 feet. “The home runs are everywhere – I saw a couple last night at dead center,” says Rajkowski. “The ball does carry well here – the wind tends to carry it out.”

The Knights kicked up $38 million for the stadium, plus funding for food service equipment and a restaurant. Their organization holds the mortgage on the ballpark, paying $1 annually in rent to the county. The city contributed $8 million to construction, and the county another $8 million. By the time all was said and done, the project came in at about $60 million.

“For a Triple A ballpark, that’s about right,” Woollen says. “It’s $6,000 a seat, and most are in that range.”

Still, the team struggles to win its games, as most Triple A teams do when the majors call up their best players. “We lost ten to the Chicago White Sox; most have been pitchers,” says Rajkowski. “So there have been some tough losses – you win a few, and you lose a few.”

Life in Charlotte’s Third Ward, though, is the real winner here.

“It’s not about baseball, and it’s not about economics,” says Smith. “It’s about coming together downtown – our vision is not to just create a baseball stadium but a ballpark neighborhood.”

So for a city intent on packing its ranks with well-heeled millennials – those recent college grads who crave a walkable city – BB&T Ballpark is a magnet.

And an out-of-the-park home run.

As the culmination of Architecture Week 2014 in Virginia, on April 11–12 the Virginia Society AIA Committee on Design drew 190 architects, educators, students, and related professionals to Charlottesville for the eleventh Virginia Design Forum. Attendees also had an opportunity to hear a presentation by Toyo Ito for the University of Virginia Founder's Day, and to participate in seminars and presentations associated with the annual Tom Tom Founder's Festival.

Design Forum XI was introduced by VSAIA President Jack Davis, FAIA, who also reminded the audience that the Virginia Accord will take place in Richmond this Sept. 19–20. The opening session on Friday evening featured keynote speaker Terence Riley, AIA, principal of Keenan Riley Architects and former architecture curator at MoMA. The house is the crucible of invention, Riley argued, in a presentation that showcased how dwellings have morphed over the centuries into the very personal space of today. Riley's analysis focused in particular on New York City multi-family condos, which have become co-ops that cater to self-selected demographics.

“The future will be global. My problems will be your problems. And the suburbs aren't the solution.”

AIA CEO Robert Ivy, FAIA, concluded the evening with observations about the ways in which genetics, robotics, nanotechnology, and the digital world are changing our existence. Architects can put these developments in perspective, he noted, thanks to their problem-solving expertise.

After a soirée at the VMDO office, co-sponsored by the Central Virginia AIA Chapter, attendees gathered Saturday morning to enjoy a talk by Jeff Kovel, AIA, founder of Skylab Architecture. Kovel spoke of his work in Portland and, most interestingly, of his use of drones for photography.

Peter Gluck, founder of the New York City architect-led design-build firm GLUCK+, continued the conversation by insisting on the importance of training architects in the art, craft, and science of planning, design, procurement, construction, and commissioning.

Kai-Uwe Bergmann, AIA, managing principal of BIG, spoke of his firm's mantra “Yes Is More.” He underscored the value of research to understand a society's needs. Architects must listen to people's requests and help them create a community in which they want to grow.

The day's presentations came to a close with a talk by Ma Yansong, founder of MAD architects in Beijing. MAD projects are meant to emphasize both programmatic and cultural requisites, he insisted. Even very large projects must respect people's individuality, and cut-throughs and twists can be useful architectural solutions in this respect.

The last event of the Forum was a vigorous panel discussion moderated by Ghazal Abbasy-Asbagh, a faculty member at the University of Virginia. Ma concluded the debate with a prophecy about the state of residential housing in China and the US: “The future will be global. My problems will be your problems. And the suburbs aren't the solution.”

What does the office of the future look like? If you're design firm Knoll, you know that this vision is constantly changing. Meeting the demands of the modern worker happens through continual adaptation, a spirit of thinking embodied in Knoll's r/evolution workplace platform.

Four different interior planning approaches form the basis of the r/evolution workplace, each of which has its own distinct look, feel, and function, says Kylie Roth, LEED AP, Knoll's Director of Workplace Strategy.

Like all projects, designing the workspace of tomorrow—whether it's a complete transformation or a minor modification—starts with a conversation. "We don't believe that any of our products fit into just one of the planning strategies," Roth says. "We make a lot of different furniture and you don't have to just stick within one product line—it's about the mix and how you can arrange those different pieces and parts to create the office that's just right for you."

The four planning approaches—Perimeter, Core, Efficient, and Adaptive—are considered "points on a continuum," adds Roth. "We know that the lines cross over and it can get blurred. We just try to provide some definite points to help have the conversation."

Perimeter Planning is "a more classic approach to workplace design," more structured and more supportive of individual focus work, while Core Planning features open spaces along the architectural perimeter. "There's more parity to natural light because enclosed spaces move to the building's core, allowing a balance of more focused, shared, and team work," she says.

Efficient Planning focuses on more space for shared and team work, as primary workspaces shrink in size. "That's often because companies are looking to maximize space utilization and minimize real estate costs," says Roth. This planning approach is often coupled with alternative workplace strategies, like telecommuting or flex-time.

The newest model is Adaptive Planning, which uses movable elements to define a variety of flexible workspaces, enabling people to respond to change and shape their own work experience.

"The office no longer just needs to support work processes, but it also more importantly needs to support people, culture, and innovation, and that's kind of resulted in this diversity of workloads and that explosion in a variety of space types and now with us, an array of work tools which consist of technology and furniture and personalized accessories," says Roth. "There's just a lot more freedom and opportunity within the work environment today."

Building or renovating a house?
Here's how to find the right

Architect

Scott Smith

ARCHITECT:

Formwork Design, LLC

PROJECT:

Kerner Dee House

LOCATION:

Charlottesville, VA

Each architect has an individual style, approach to design, and method of working. So it's important to find an architect who is compatible with your personal style and needs. To help in your search, follow these few steps to success.

Build a list of possibilities. Ask around. Find out who designed projects in your community that you like. Get recommendations from friends, relatives, and acquaintances who have worked with architects. Check to see if the architect is a member of the American Institute of Architects (AIA). Membership in the AIA means that the architect subscribes to a high professional purpose to advance standards of practice and service to society. This includes having a code of ethics and access to a variety of professional and technical resources.

Contact your local AIA chapter. Many have lists of member-owned firms that are interested in doing various types of projects. The most complete statewide list is published in this directory, but you can also search for firms on the internet at www.aia.org.

Call each firm on your list. Describe your project and ask the architects if they are available to accomplish it. If so, request literature that outlines the firm's qualifications and experience. If the office is unable to handle your project, ask if they can recommend another firm.

Interview each firm. Interviewing a firm gives you a chance to meet the people who will design your project and to learn if the chemistry between you is right. You may be working with your architect for a long time, so choose someone with whom you feel comfortable. Allow at least an hour for the interview, preferably at the architect's office where you can see where the work will be done. Some architects charge for the interview, so ask if there is a fee involved with the consultation.

Ask questions. How busy is the firm? Does it have the capacity to take on your work? Who will handle the job? Insist on meeting the person who will actually design your project. What is the firm's design philosophy? Talk about a project budget and the range of fees that the architect would anticipate for your project. Before you select an architect, ask to be taken to at least one completed project. Also ask for references from past clients. These are invaluable. In addition, you might want to obtain an Architect's Qualifications Statement (form B431) from the Virginia Society AIA offices. This standardized document may be used to verify an architect's credentials and other information prior to selecting an architect for a project.

Making the final cut. Unlike buying a new car or new appliance, you can't see the product and test it out. The architect provides a professional service, not a product. The right architect will be the one who can provide the judgment, technical expertise, and creative skills — at a reasonable cost — to help you realize a project that fits your practical needs as well as your dreams.

This brief introduction was excerpted from "Home Delivery," a guide to how an AIA architect can help you realize your dream home. Copies of the publication can be requested by calling the Virginia Society AIA at 804-644-3041.

The information published here is provided by the firms. Some details may have changed since publication. To verify your information or to be added to this listing contact scalvin@aiava.org.

Search by Firm Name

The architecture firms listed in this directory have a principal who is a member of the VSAIA. There may be other principals or employees of the firm who are not listed. Firms are listed alphabetically beginning on this page.

This listing includes the four primary areas of a firm's practice, although other types of projects aren't necessarily excluded from the firm's range of work

Each firm has selected up to five of their recently completed projects. If you're considering hiring a firm, think about visiting some of the buildings listed. Ask the building owners about their experience with the firm and if they're satisfied with the project.

In each firm listing you'll find:

- Name, address and phone number
- Firm principals and personnel levels
- Principal areas of practice
- Recent projects

Search by Region

The regional index is organized by city and town. To search for an architecture firm by region, turn to the index beginning on page 69.

Emeritus members are identified with an asterisk.

Tragedy counts many victims. Including the unfortunate architect who ignores acoustical engineering.

Faulkner's classic Shakespeare reference serves up an apt warning for architects: Ignore the twin evils of noise and vibration and risk tragic consequences.

The last thing you want to hear is bad news about acoustical design – or the lack thereof. From mechanical hum to environmental noise, the pitfalls are lurking. Whether you need to ensure vibration-free lab settings or provide workspace speech privacy, Phoenix Noise & Vibration can help. With staff board-certified in noise control engineering, we offer solutions designed on the front end versus trouble-shooting on the back end. Or worse. (You sure won't like the sound of that.)

Make sure your next project has a classic ending. With acoustical engineering by Phoenix, it's bound to resonate success.

JOIN THE CREATIVE FLOW

Architects asked for an easier-to-use workflow solution that would let them stay in their creative flow longer. Meet ArchiCAD 18. It's faster. More capable. And easier to use. With features architects asked for, including

- MAXON's CINEMA 4D Rendering
- Updated revision management
- Even easier collaboration tools – for working with CAD managers, structural engineers, MEP engineers, and more.
