

Today's News - October 4, 2002

Gleaned from reports today: There are six finalists for the Pentagon Memorial, but they won't be announced until October 11; the big upset: none of the proposals include any reference to WTC or Pennsylvania victims. – An exhibition puts center stage the usually invisible elements of urban (and suburban) infrastructure. – Design-cum-security plans are approved that will make Washington, DC look less "like Bosnia." – The Eden Project gets bigger. – A new monument for London (and not all are pleased...so what else is new?). – Detroit students consider remaking communities. – A thoughtful interview with Zaha Hadid. – A plea to architects in Ghana: "the more architects we produce, the worse our housing situation gets." – A renaissance for Tyre may endanger some of its historic areas. – Smart furniture to keep us healthy. – Fighting crime by design in Australia. – London will get its own glass bridge...and much more.
