

Today's News - January 30, 2003

A new university annex becomes a hands-on experience in preservation and urban design policy. – It's unofficial: shortlist for WTC design (Foster was a close third). – A Canadian critic calls it even before the (un)officials do. – Lessons in memorial-building from Oklahoma. – Engineers (finally) getting a star turn. – Mixed-use developments are not new, but need new thinking. – Landmark status for the first of 24,000 "little boxes made of ticky-tacky." – Renewal vs. history in Milwaukee (as elsewhere). – Another barrage against Chicago's new Soldier Field. – Another rave review for London's new dance center. – New life for an architectural grande dame in Auckland. – On the road with sustainable renovation seminars in Australia. – P/A Awards at 50: a look back at a venerable program (NYC reception this evening).
