Today's News - November 17, 2005

Wal-Mart and new urbanism perhaps not such an oxymoron for the Gulf Coast. -- New Orleans rebuilding leadership taking shape - architects included (subcommittees, anyway). -- Sprawl costs (who'd have thought?). -- 15 creative class-friendly cities, with creative class-cred and caveats. -- Las Vegas ramping up to be the greenest (it's about time). -- Before "green" was cool, there was Sim Van der Ryn, still going strong. -- Rebuttal to last week's article belittling Cork as the European Capital of Culture. -- Ireland's National Conference Centre still on the boards in Dublin, and still struggling to become a reality. -- A national library for Latvia by Birkerts still on the boards, but much closer to reality. -- Architecture critics critique the state of architectural criticism. - 2006 Burnham Prize Competition call for entries. -- A thumbs-up for "Designing the Taxi" - and hopes that ideas might become reality.

Mississippi Wal-Marts may apply 'new urbanism' in rebuilding: Urban planners invited...to bring fresh rebuilding ideas to 11 hurricane-damaged communities have devised concepts that would turn Wal-Mart's big-box stores into corner stores. -- Ben Pentreath/Prince of Wales Foundation for the Built Environment; Fisher & Hall Urban Design - USA Today

New Orleans Rebuilding Leadership Beginning to Take Shape -- Wallace, Roberts & Todd; Reed Kroloff, dean at Tulane University's School of Architecture; Ray Manning, AIA; Peter Trapolin, AIA - Architectural Record

Study: Sprawl costs billions: The markets facing the highest costs are Los Angeles, WashingtonBaltimore and the San Francisco Bay area... -- Sacramento Business Journal

Fast Cities: They're 15 up-and-coming hubs for creative workers -- places that draw people who are talented, tech savvy, and tolerant - Fast Company

The value of green: Las Vegas is quickly ramping up to become a leader in green building...By Lance Kirk/Lucchesi Galati Architects -- JMA Architecture Studios; Tate Snyder Kimsay Architects - Las Vegas Business Press

It Happened Here First: Before sustainability became the buzzword du jour, there was Sim Van der Ryn, now 70, the intrepid pioneer of the eco-frontier. - New York Times

Right of Reply: Cork in midst of one of the most exciting phases of its history: A city constrained by a Frank McDonald credo would be 'dismal and prissy' says property developer Owen O'Callaghan, responding to..."Little to show for year as European Capital of Culture" feature last week - Irish Times

The National Conference Centre hasn't docked yet...many obstacles ahead for €400m plan -- Kevin Roche - Unison (Ireland)

National library finally looks set to go ahead: Castle of Light should spectacularly live up to its name, like a white mountain radiating light from across the Gaujas River [Riga, Latvia]. -- Gunnar Birkerts - The Baltic Times

On Criticism: critics...describe how their varied concerns — technological, political, ecological, cultural — have shaped their approach to a field they helped create...responsible criticism benefits not just the profession but society at large. -- Ada Louise Huxtable; Allan Temko; Paul Goldberger; Michael Sorkin; Robert Campbell; Deyan Sudjic - The Architect's Newspaper (NYC)

2006 Burnham Prize Competition: Learning from North Lawndale: Defining the Urban Neighborhood in the 21st Century; registration deadline: January 20, 2006 - Chicago Architectural Club

Innovation Needn't Take a Back Seat: "Designing the Taxi" presents evidence that annoying little aspects of taxi travel...need not be tolerated. By Linda Hales - Design Trust for Public Space; Parsons; Antenna Design; CityStreets; Birsel + Seck; FXFOWLE Architects (Fox & Fowle); Weisz + Yoes - Washington Post

Herzog & de Meuron: de Young Museum, San Francisco