

Today's News - December 19, 2005

As we promised on Friday, a few tributes to James Ingo Freed from different cities where he left his mark. – Canada loses Gertler, its "founding father of town planning." – Great profiles of the New York Five and Huxtable (how much they appreciate being called "Power Geezers" is another question). – Study shows New Zealand architects need to pay more attention to shade for "kiwi kids." – Not very high marks for JetBlue's new JFK terminal. – High praise elsewhere: Rogers Welsh National Assembly stands on a chair and shouts. – Correa's MIT building for studying the brain is "superb." – An exhibition of Botta's buildings of worship make spirits soar. – Llonch+Vidalle makes a Missouri church renovation "feel like it is in constant motion." – ROM's new galleries less Disneyfied, more greenhouse than jewel box. – Architectural Association of Ireland names winners. – 'Tis the season for Year in Reviews: Sudjic calls it the "heights of folly and fashion." – Chicago mixes art and architecture (architecture comes in at #3). – One we couldn't resist: SPA's take tells it like it really is (and who couldn't use a really good chuckle on a Monday?).
