

Today's News - May 22, 2006

ArcSpace brings us two hot L.A. projects. – A Frenchman in Spain takes International High-Rise Prize (commendations not too shabby either). – NYT Sunday Magazine totally devoted to architecture (plan to spend some time with this one!). – Farrelly not just a bit suspicious of two new books extolling the virtues of suburbanism. – Thumbs-up and thumbs-down on New Urbanist communities (visiting local "villages" is a "great deal less expensive than visiting movie studios in Los Angeles" is one way to look at them). – Does "quirky" architecture make a town tacky or welcoming? – Big plans for U.K.'s Cowgate (make that the much more hip "SoCo"). – Some out-of-the-box thinking for a green Olympics could give Chicago the edge. – Foster wins big with school contracts - but not everyone is convinced it's the right way to go. – A piece of "fleshy, juicy fruit" of a new store for Apple is drawing the crowds. – Vision for Orange County Great Park is complex with a simple intention. – Montréal is first city in North America to be designated part of UNESCO's Creative Cities Network. – Some "fantastically futuristic hotel designs" await visitors to the World Cup in Germany. – Demand for Ando everywhere. – Barbican exhibit of futuristic cities imagined between 1956-2006, but truly radical visions are found in films. – Fuller/Noguchi show "explores their rapport." – Three winners in AIA/HUD Housing and Design Awards. – Once we couldn't resist: a report on Libeskind's 60th birthday bash (be sure to check out NYT Mag to find out why he wears those glasses). – EDITOR'S NOTE: We are on the road, and hoping to have Internet access for a couple more days. If not, we'll be back Tuesday, May 30.
