• This year's Pritzker Prize winner was to be under wraps until April 11, but a Spanish news source spilled the beans yesterday, so today Hawthorne, LaBarre, and Lifson offer their takes (Terry Riley chimes in, too).

• An interesting mix debate: The Incredible Shrinking City: Can empty urban lands be brought back to life?

• Hume cheers the trend of 21st-century architecture being about connectivity and community - a hard lesson for some architects "more inclined to stand out rather than fit in" to learn.

• Cheek on the "tyranny" of the right angle "making Seattle's streetscape tedious," and "a little nonlinear thinking by designers can go a long way" - though some "architects tend to come unhinged from reality and create shapes that would better be left on the planet Mongo."

• Hopes are high that fresh blood (and a future competition) will re-spark the "languishing" Houses at Sagaponac development on Long Island.

• Groves on a mystery landowner's planned 85,000-square-foot "mega-mansion" in L.A. that some very tony neighbors claim "pushes the bounds of common sense and decency" + Mystery solved: owner is a Saudi prince (quelle surprise!).

• Carretero on the new home for the world's richest man's "mind-blowing" art collection: "It might almost be a coiled primateal creature straining to burst from the skin of a reptile...ethereal and otherworldly...a thrilling new treasure of modern architecture."

• Long cheers Levete's V&A victory: "It is easy to see why she won...her project had the most conviction."

• A look at one of Philip Johnson's least-known works that may be his best: the 1963 Pavilion at Dumbarton Oaks.

• Carretero on the new home for the world's richest man's "mind-blowing" art collection: "it might almost be a coiled primeval creature straining to burst from the skin of a reptile...ethereal and otherworldly...a thrilling new treasure of modern architecture."

• King cheers a few stories, including a San Francisco synagogue returning to its pre-quake neoclassical glory and "a shot of shameless self-promotion."

• A look at one of Philip Johnson's least-known works that may be his best: the 1963 Pavilion at Dumbarton Oaks.

• This year's Pritzker Prize winner was to be under wraps until April 11, but a Spanish news source spilled the beans yesterday, so today Hawthorne, LaBarre, and Lifson offer their takes (Terry Riley chimes in, too).

• An interesting mix debate: The Incredible Shrinking City: Can empty urban lands be brought back to life?

• Hume cheers the trend of 21st-century architecture being about connectivity and community - a hard lesson for some architects "more inclined to stand out rather than fit in" to learn.

• Cheek on the "tyranny" of the right angle "making Seattle's streetscape tedious," and "a little nonlinear thinking by designers can go a long way" - though some "architects tend to come unhinged from reality and create shapes that would better be left on the planet Mongo."

• Hopes are high that fresh blood (and a future competition) will re-spark the "languishing" Houses at Sagaponac development on Long Island.

• Groves on a mystery landowner's planned 85,000-square-foot "mega-mansion" in L.A. that some very tony neighbors claim "pushes the bounds of common sense and decency" + Mystery solved: owner is a Saudi prince (quelle surprise!).

• Carretero on the new home for the world's richest man's "mind-blowing" art collection: "It might almost be a coiled primeval creature straining to burst from the skin of a reptile...ethereal and otherworldly...a thrilling new treasure of modern architecture."

• Long cheers Levete's V&A victory: "It is easy to see why she won...her project had the most conviction."

• A look at one of Philip Johnson's least-known works that may be his best: the 1963 Pavilion at Dumbarton Oaks.

• Carretero on the new home for the world's richest man's "mind-blowing" art collection: "it might almost be a coiled primeval creature straining to burst from the skin of a reptile...ethereal and otherworldly...a thrilling new treasure of modern architecture."

• King cheers a few stories, including a San Francisco synagogue returning to its pre-quake neoclassical glory and "a shot of shameless self-promotion."

• A look at one of Philip Johnson's least-known works that may be his best: the 1963 Pavilion at Dumbarton Oaks.
In the Round: One of Philip Johnson's least-known works may be his best: For as much as [he] plowed through decades and styles...some sniffed that other than his 1949 Glass House...the emperor had no clothes. But there is at least one other building worth 50 or 60, and chances are you haven't heard of it: the Pre-Columbian Pavilion at Dumbarton Oaks (1963)...The noble beauty of the small structure is the tension between transparency and heft... [slide show]- Wall Street Journal

Benedict Canyon neighbors unite against mystery landowner's planned 'megamansion': They say his planned 85,000-square-foot family compound pushes the bounds of common sense and decency...owner of a pricey 5.2-acre property on Tower Lane is fast becoming persona non grata among an exclusive club of Los Angeles homeowners.- Los Angeles Times

Former property owner confirms Saudi prince purchased Benedict Canyon site: "I warned the prince that he was surrounded by very powerful neighbors and that he should be extremely careful in what he proposes to build." By Martha Groves -- Jarrett Hedborg; Richard Landry- Los Angeles Times

Happy Birthday, Mies! ...celebrate with a rather, well, unique tribute to the architect...[music video]- The Architect's Newspaper

Book Review: "Immaterial World: Transparency in Architecture": Marc Kristal crystallizes increasingly complex notions of transparency with a light touch...invites additional research, reflection, and archi-tourism. By Norman Weinstein -- Diller Scofidio + Renfro; Alejandro Aravena; Toyo Ito; Christian de Portzamparc- ArchNewsNow.com

A Tale of Two Pools: Q&A with Paulett Taggart: It was the sunniest of pools, it was the foggiest of pools, but the architectural approach is similar: there is nothing unnecessary. -- Paulett Taggart Architects; Mark Cavagnero Associates [images]- ArchNewsNow

Lundgaard & Tranberg Arkitekter: Charlottehaven, Copenhagen, Denmark

Announcements From Our Sponsors

ArchExpo Website Redesign Press Release - The redesigned website features expanded content, more product images and new search facilities for a richer visitor experience.

Note: Pages will open in a new browser window.
External news links are not endorsed by ArchNewsNow.com.
Free registration may be required on some sites.
Some pages may expire after a few days.