Architects accused of silence over Ai Weiwei: Practices are putting business interests before conscience...The two British practices working with Ai Weiwei on a Chinese housing project [Ordos 100] have accused the profession of not speaking out about Ai Weiwei's incarceration for fear of losing work. -- DRDH Architects; Simon Conder Associates; Herzog & de Meuron; Encore Heureux; Will Alsop; Robert Adam - BD/Building Design (UK)

Op-Ed: Renovate rundown housing laws: Recent N.Y.C. deaths underline urgent need for reform: Unlike cities such as Tokyo and San Diego, which permit innovation in housing design and living arrangements, New York City's pileup of 20th century laws and regulations keeps our legal housing options frozen in time. By Rosanne Haggerty/Common Ground and Jerilyn Perine/Citizens Housing & Planning Council (CHPC) - NY Daily News

The Death of the McMansion: When the housing market returns, we'll want smaller homes built closer together...It is likely that in the future multifamily housing will represent a larger share of the American housing market...An alternative scenario is that American optimism will prevail and it will be business as usual...But I wouldn't count on it. By Witold Rybczynski - Slate

Vertical Screen building offers bright ideas for cubicle slaves: ...striking, hangar-shaped building...has a knockout form, but one that is also simple and clear...it may look like an alien spaceship landed. Located at the end of what used to be a runway, the hangar conjures memories of more glorious times, restoring some lost dignity to the site. By Inga Saffron -- Erdy McHenry Architecture; Re:Vision Architecture [images] - Philadelphia Inquirer

Sculpting the Hepworth: Art meets industry in David Chipperfield's Hepworth Wakefield gallery, reflecting two facets of its Yorkshire location's heritage. But is this work of art devoid of humanity? By Ike Ijeh [images] - Building (UK)

Constructive criticism: In the first of our weekly architecture round-ups, shopfronts breathe, towers flower and the Walkie-Talkie wins light rights...The architectural world was a cabinet of curiosities this week...By Jonathan Glancey -- Eric Parry; Metaphor; Honey architects; Duggan Morris; Chetwoods Architects; 3XN; AEW; Zaha Hadid; Rafael Viñoly [images, links] - Guardian (UK)

Architecture exhibit focuses on problem-solving: Projekte Projects [Wilmingtom, NC] presents "MICROSCALE" by Toby Keeton...a visual exhibition of design activity that presents seven social and innovative design proposals for housing and public health structures. - Star-News (North Carolina)

Cairo has potential to become sustainable city, says eco-architect: Dominique Gauzin-Müller, a French architect who specializes in sustainable development...brought her exhibition "Live ecological: what types of architecture for a sustainable city" to Egypt in part because one of the pioneers of eco-responsible architecture is Egyptian architect Hassan Fathy. - Al-Masry Al-Youm (Egypt)

Five Architects Define The Meaning Of California Cool: House porn meets furniture porn, in [POV] a new video series by Herman Miller. Oh, baby! In a masterstroke, Hello Design tapped Jurgen Nagel to shoot the interior spaces...the former business partner of Julius Shulman...By Suzanne LaBarre -- Marmol Radziner; Cigolle X Coleman; Jennings Architecture; LeanArch; JFAK Architects [images, videos] - Fast Company on urban living is 50 this year. Our current leaders would do well to read it...there is something almost eerily contemporary about [her] work...Her belief that urban planners and architects should not be realising visions, but creating and preserving resilient, inclusive and adaptable neighbourhoods...still resonates. By Ben Rogers -- Peter Hall; Ebenezer Howard; Patrick Geddes; Le Corbusier; Edward Glaeser; Richard Florida; Guardian (UK)

Iconoclasm and Iconolatry: A Review of "Reconsidering Jane Jacobs"...If Jacobs might not recognize "ideas and planning practices" that her name has come to symbolize, then what are those ideas and practices, and who decides what they are, and for whom? what in particular makes [the book] exceptional is that the editors, Max Page and Timothy Mennel, take a broad view...This is (mostly) not a book about planning so much as it is a book about culture... By Frank Gruber - Huffington Post

Proxy Wars: More on "Reconsidering Jane Jacobs": Jill Grant...considers the relationship between Jacobs and New Urbanism. What becomes apparent is that Grant doesn't like Jacobs, but because of Jacobs' unassailable status, Grant goes after her through that convenient punching bag, New Urbanism. By Frank Gruber - Huffington Post

"The Architecture of Harry Weese" by Robert Bruegmann with Kathleen Murphy Skolnik: ...[his] hundreds of built projects, unrelenting urban boosterism, and deep commitment to public life and preservation made him arguably more influential than any of his contemporaries. It is hard to avoid that conclusion after reading [the book]...Extensively researched, honestly written and generously illustrated, this is a first-rate monograph... By Ian Baldwin [images] - Places Journal

Photographer Frederic Chaubin's weird and wonderful Soviet architecture: "CCCP: Cosmic Communist Constructions Photographed"...90 unconventional, rarely seen buildings...These weird, modernistic structures reveal a surprising freedom after the strict controls in 1920s Constructivism... By Los Angeles Times
