Building Faces Wrecking Ball. So Does Couples' Friendship: A long friendship between two couples, all four of whom are well-known architects, is under stress after one couple recommended razing a museum designed by the other pair...In architectural circles, the debate has gone beyond a discussion of the personal relationships to questions of design integrity...

Kathryn Findlay, architect, 1953-2014: ...[she] was never quite going to be a mainstream architect. Yet...she was one of the (still few) great women architects of the modern age...self-deprecating and witty...acked the arrogance architects seem to require to become stars. But she had the talent and tenacity that could have merited greater success and wider acclaim. If it is more common to see successful women architects now than it was 20 years ago, Findlay and her generation cleared the ground. But it was tough going.

Designing with nature

THE ironic thing these days about attaining a structure that sustainably comes close to nature is you first need to be ready to spend a lot. This is because a sustainable building is built with pricy materials that most often have to be imported from many parts of the world.

But Arch. Mike Guerrero, chairman of Green Architecture Advocacy Philippines and managing partner of Asian Architects, advocates through his regular talks all over the Philippines that all the materials and resources you need to design an environment-friendly edifice are already made available right on the land you are working on.-
