- ArcSpace brings us eyefuls of Luigi Rosselli Architects' rammed-earth complex in the Australian outback to provide "short-term accommodation during the cattle-mustering season" (very cool!).
- Kennedy gives thumbs-up to Beyer Blinder Belle's less-is-more approach to its restoration/renovation of the Met Breuer (great pix).
- The New Museum's Wong delves into the Venice Biennale and the Pritzker Prize betting big on Aravena, "who just may have the right combination of idealism and pragmatism to drag us out of the 20th century and into a just new world."
- Wachs wades deep into Memphis, Tennessee's "urban resurgence" and projects that "are bright spots on city terrain marked by persistent disinvestment. They should be praised for their intent and watched closely for their outcomes."
- A great Q&A with Rwandan architect Benimana of MASS Design Group re: "what Africa's emerging cities can learn from China" (mostly what not to do, and how "more African architects and designers can have a hand in the design and construction of the continent's new cities."
- A look at "a new wave of talent" in Ghanaian (and African) architecture, with "newly-minted architects out to prove that they can be both practical and creative."
- Zeiger offers a fascinating take on gender in architecture: "In honoring the ladies of design, do we risk divorcing them from the overall discipline, thus marginalizing their accomplishments? If the goal is to recognize talent, experimentation and innovation, there seems no reason to create a binary in the field."
- Results of AIA's 2016 Women in Architecture Survey "provide disturbing insights - alarmingly, more than one in five would not recommend a career in architecture."
- A great profile of Louise Blanchard Bethune, "Buffalo's gift to architecture and women's rights," who championed "equal remuneration for equal service." It is a goal that even today has not yet been fully realized."
- Ennead is tapped to renovate and expand the lobby of Lincoln Center's Metropolitan Opera House.
- OMA's de Graaf says "the 21st-century trend in city building has led to a mad and meaningless overdose of themes, extremes, egos and extravagance. What is needed is a new beginning."
- MVRDV's Knikker and Davidson take issue with Minkjan using one of their projects to argue that the renderings of "lush greenery might in reality not turn out like the render - we go to great lengths before these promises are made and to make these promises happen" (a great read).
- Campbell-Dollaghan takes a look back at Walter Bird and his "Cold War technology that created a new architecture" for the likes of Jahn, Bunshaft, and Rogers.
- Cheers to the 12 architects receiving the 2016 AIA Young Architects Award! MVRDV's Knikker and Davidson take issue with Minkjan using one of their projects to argue that the renderings of "lush greenery might in reality not turn out like the render - we go to great lengths before these promises are made and to make these promises happen" (a great read).
- Mossop takes the helm as new Dean of Design, Architecture and Building at the University of Technology Sydney.
- Richardson steps down as director of the British Council; Mann steps into the job.
- "The rising star in the world of architecture: With a new wave of talent emerging, so too is distinctly Ghanaian architecture - newly-minted architects out to prove that they can be both practical and creative. Ghana's two architectural colleges are keen to impress upon its students the country's rich building heritage, -- Akosua Obeng/Orthner, Orthner & Associates; Frances Buckle-Thompson; David Adjaye; Sharon Davis; Stan Field; Diébédo Francis Kéré/Kéré Architecture [images] - CNN World
- 'Despite the pull of gender, there is still the work - the ideas, designs and buildings that transcend any single notion of identity;' ...in honouring the ladies of design, do we risk divorcing them from the overall discipline, thus marginalising their accomplishments...Gender differentiation...comes with a thorny rhetorical question: What's the difference? If the goal is to recognise talent, experimentation and innovation, there seems no reason to create a binary in the field. By Mimi Zeiger -- Susan Surface/Design in Public; Toshiko Mori; Tamar Shafir/Space Caviar; Jing Liu/SIO:; Dang Gunn/MAD Architects - Architectural Review (UK)
- "A Look at the Met Breuer Before the Doors Open: To step forward, architects restoring the new Met Breuer, formerly the Whitney Museum, took several steps back toward Marcel Breuer's intentions: "He loved the hard dignity of aging materials...One of the most important parts of restoration is in deciding what not to do. And we didn't do a lot." By Randy Kennedy -- Beyer Blinder Belle [images] - New York Times
- "Why the Design World is Betting Big on Alejandro Aravena: Be it collusion or good luck, this year's Venice Architecture Biennale and the Pritzker Prize are reflecting in each other's seemingly quixotic decision: to bet big on an architect who just may have the right combination of idealism and pragmatism to drag us out of the 20th century and into a just new world. By Karen Wong/New Museum -- Elemental- artnet News
- The Memphis Movement: Will Memphis's recent urban resurgence be felt citywide? These projects are bright spots on city terrain marked by persistent disinvestment. They should be praised for their intent and watched closely for their outcomes.
