Work in Progress

It's been 3 years since I moved into my midcentury ranch, and I've averaged a remodeling project every year since. First was the kitchen, then the front yard landscaping. And I'm officially 5 months behind schedule on this year's goal: the master bedroom and master bath expansion. Two good reasons: the world experienced a pandemic which, by the time you're reading this, I can only pray has begun to subside and the lives and livelihoods of those most impacted have begun to recover too. And speaking of lives, I'm brewing one in my belly at the moment and she's kind of got me on her timetable instead of mine. Yep, I'll be bumping up a nursery project in front of that bed/bath remodel instead.

And while it's easy for anyone to feel behind or overwhelmed about the business of improving our homes, the important thing to remember is that it's always a work in progress. Whether this issue provides you with insight and ideas for right now, or it's just fodder for today's dreams of tomorrow, hunting and gathering for the designs and concepts that are just right for your mod gem is a constant act.

We put together our annual Renovation Guide for a homeowner at every stage of the process. We cull together top products that will never go out of style, and consult experts for advice that pays off whether you're in the contemplation stage or the work order stage of your own project. I hope the tours we've gathered inspire you to stay the course and fill your vision of home with nothing but exciting and hopeful thoughts of what's to come.

Flooring 101

Overwhelmed by options? Start with these 5 flooring profiles.

By SARAH L. YOON

FLOORING IS A LONG-TERM RELATIONSHIP where you commit not only to a look, but to a lifestyle. Do you want the natural feel of hardwood, or the sustainability of Marmoleum? If the thought of picking the right option gives you cold feet, we have the perfect solution for that, too. Picking a new floor requires plenty of research and seeking a professional is always recommended, but these facts on five common midcentury flooring options will help get you started!

Wood

Wood has a timeless look, but how much time will it give you? High quality hardwood floors can be refinished over and over and still have life to give, while laminates are replaced in 15-25 years. The option you choose all depends on how long you need it to last.

• Ideal for: Hardwood flooring is perfect if you want a durable floor that's cool to the feet, but not as hard and icy as stone. It can handle traffic but needs some care. For a Midcentury Modern look, consider narrow planks, warm tones and subtle finishes.

• Care: Maintain your hardwood by filling your home with furniture pads. Fewer scratches means longer spans between refinishes, extending the floor's integrity from five years to ten years. Area rugs in high traffic areas can also lower the blow of daily use.

• Cost: Mid-grade hardwood costs between $5-$10 per square foot, with an additional $4-$8 for installation. Engineered hardwood and laminate are cheaper options, but they come with shorter lifespans.

• When was it popular? Hardwood floors were essential to the Victorian and Craftsman styles of the mid-1800s. Even with the rise of synthetics in the mid-1900s, they have remained a classic. The nostalgia for vintage homes and the need for sustainability has increased the use of reclaimed lumber.

 Climate: Temperate climates are best for hardwood, since the boards shrink in the cold and warp in the heat. Always check that the materials will be happy in your home before you invite them in to stay.

Terrazzo

Terrazzo is a composite flooring that originated in Italy. It binds stonework scraps together, borrowing the beauty of finer stone while allowing for creative freedom. You choose a mix of aggregate, such as marble, mother of pearl, glass, shell or even porcelain to create a dramatically new look.

• Ideal for: Heavy traffic areas. Terrazzo can handle commercial-level pavement pounding with grace.

• Care: Easy. General cleaning is a must, but no special polishing or cleaners are necessary. It is difficult to damage, and even the rare chip won't show up on the randomized pattern.

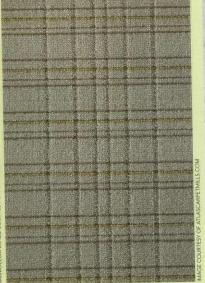

• Cost: Pouring a fresh terrazzo slab can cost between $25 and $90 per square foot. The truth is, this can be cost prohibitive for the average homeowner, so consider it a long-term investment for long-term enjoyment. In the shorter run, terrazzo tiles will considerably lower that price tag.

When was it popular? The art deco movement latched onto terrazzo in the 1920s, and the trend turned classic as it became popular in Midcentury Modern homes. Frank Lloyd Write used dazzling white terrazzo flooring for New York's Guggenheim Museum, completed in 1959.
Climate: Terrazzo can handle just about any climate, since it's made of stone mixed into either cement or epoxy. The only question for colder climates is whether you want to install radiant heating.

Linoleum and Marmoleum

Linoleum flooring is nearly indestructible. The Titanic may have met a tragic end, but even a hundred years later its linseed and cork linoleum lives on. A more modern offering is Forbo's Marmoleum, a sustainable, high-quality linoleum that is offered in sheets, tiles and interlocking panels.

• Ideal for: Durability, sustainability and color. It's heavy duty enough for hospitals and schools and inexpensive to repair for the scratches and wear that inevitably happen over its 30-40 year lifespan.

• Care: Clean up spills quickly. Linoleum is moisture resistant but needs extra attention in splashy places like kitchens and bathrooms. Don't worry too much about scratches. Unlike generic linoleum, Marmoleum damage is repaired in spots rather than requiring a surface-wide reseal. Cost: Both Linoleum and Marmoleum generally cost $3-$7 per square foot, but consider prep and installation as well. Marmoleum's click panels can be placed in easily, but sheet and tile require more time and material to install. • When was it popular? Linoleum has been around since the 1860s. Its ease and durability earned it a place of honor in American homes all the way through World War II. Though vinyl emerged as a cheaper alternative, even Pablo Picasso knew that linoleum was the real deal. He created linocuts with this durable medium in the late '50s and early '60s.

• Climate: If linoleum can survive under the ocean, it can thrive in any climate. Just make sure it's sealed against humidity.

Carpet

Carpet became the new musthave during the 1950s housing boom, and tufted nylon was just the start. Bold colors and sculpted patterns made this luxury into a dramatic statement. We've seen some funky trends over the years, from 1960s avocado green shag to the 1980s beige Berber, but carpet has stayed popular through every turn.

 Ideal for: Comfort. It cushions your feet, reduces noise and helps insulate the home. It makes living areas even more livable and loveable.

• Care: Vacuum regularly and spot clean. A professional deep clean every 1-2 years will lengthen the carpet's lifespan.

• Cost: Mid-level carpet costs only $2-$4 per square foot, but add $1-$2 for padding and installation.

 When was it popular? Carpets grew in popularity after 1930, when production was mechanized. In 1950, synthetic materials helped the market boom. It has dominated the flooring market ever since, covering approximately 50% of America's homes.
 Climate: Drier, cooler climates are best for carpeting. It's great for cozying up a chill spring evening, but no one wants to risk mold in the damp Floridian air. If you must have that cushion under your feet and your area isn't ideal for carpeting, go for area rugs.

Stone

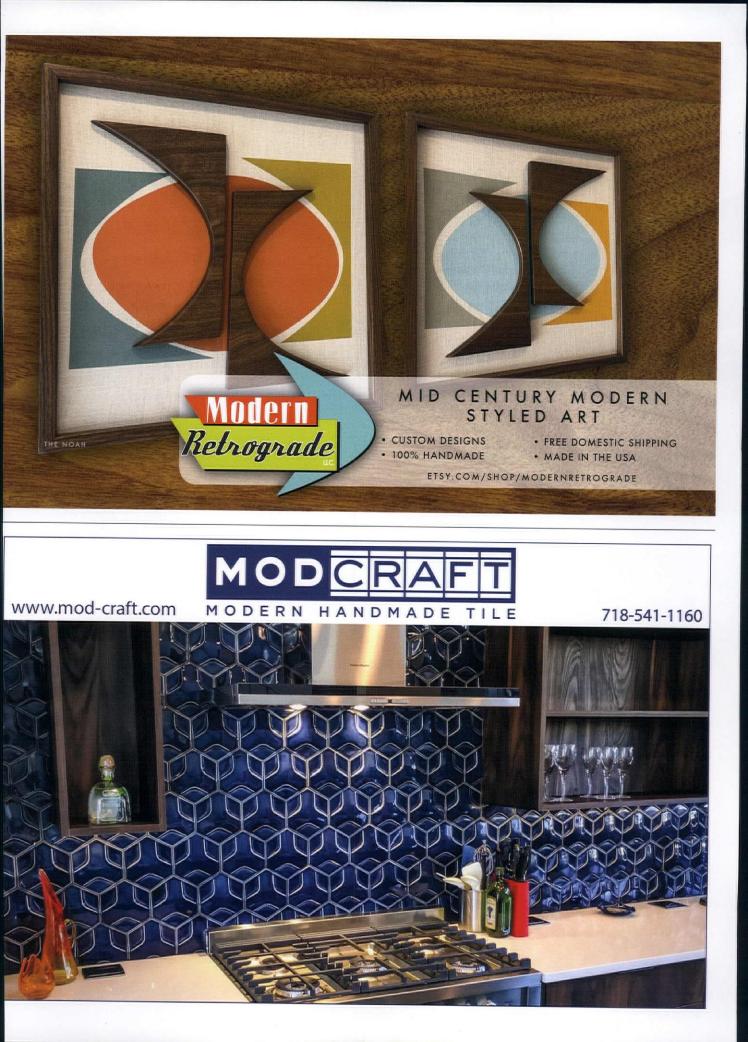

If you choose stone for your flooring, you're inviting luxury on mythic levels. The rise and fall of civilizations can be read between marbled lines. Natural history pools in travertine's dimples. Add granite, slate and limestone to the list, and you've got thousands of options. Though the midcentury market was flooded with synthetics, interiors still show a love for natural stone.

• Ideal for: Durability. Stone is ideal for long use, and serves well in any room in your home, but beauty is its top selling point.

• Care: Clean spills quickly and keep acids away. Even something as innocent as lime wedges can damage marble. Sweep regularly and use a damp mop with a mild soap.

• Cost: Stone prices vary widely, averaging between $2-$15 per square foot, with an additional $5-$15 for installation. If the price tag is a deterrent, there are alternatives to flooring: a stacked stone accent wall in the entry, or a fireplace façade. When was it popular? Stone has always been popular, but not always available for the average home. For example, Frank Lloyd Wright's 1935 achievement, Fallingwater, is covered in local sandstone. Wright taught over 600 apprentices who brought his passion for organic architecture into the midcentury scene.

• Climate: Stone handles colder climates better than ceramic, porcelain and wood, but it isn't great for warming cold toes. Its longevity is exceptional, but consider heat sources before you commit.

Classic Eichler tract-home architecture meets personalized living for the 21st century in this vibrant desert home.

By LINDSAY JARVIS Photography by GREYSHOCK & DUPONT PHOTOGRAPHY

(TOP) THIS NEW-BUILD HOME WAS MADE FROM AN EICHLER FLOOR PLAN WITH THOUGHTFUL CUSTOM UPDATES FOR MODERN-DAY LIVING AND INCREASED EFFICIENCY. A VIBRANT DOOR ADDS CURB APPEAL TO THE FRONT EXTERIOR, AND THE AVOCADO-GREEN COLOR IS CARRIED THROUGHOUT THE HOME IN INTERIOR ACCENTS AS WELL. AN EICHLER IN THE DESERT? Though Joseph Eichler never built his tract homes in Palm Springs during the midcentury, KUD Properties has recently acquired a license and is the exclusive builder of these "Desert Eichler" homes in the greater Palm Springs area. Troy Kudlac, founder and broker of KUD Properties and KUD development, shares his inspiration for the new-build homes: "On the quest for furthering our architectural knowledge, we ventured to Los Angeles and Orange County; we came across the Fairhaven tract of Eichlers. I was in awe and in love with the neighborhoods and their space age, Jetsons-like feel." From there, KUD eventually worked out the licensing details and now offers five different Eichler home models, with plans to expand their available options.

There are currently seven Desert Eichlers located throughout the Coachella Valley, and this particular home attracted buyers from across the country. Homeowners Linda Rowe, a pediatric occupational therapist/orthotist, and her partner, Betty Eng Lee, Chief Operating Officer/Clinic Manager, were living in New York City and hoping to retire in the sunshine of Palm Springs. They came across a listing for Desert Eichler #6, and the couple, who also own a post-and-beam home in the Hamptons, were impressed by the central location (within walking distance to downtown) and drawn to the Midcentury Modern plans. "The concept of bringing the outdoors inside, especially with the atrium—which the Eichlers are known for—affords the experience of the out-of-doors inside," says Linda. The couple purchased the home before building, allowing them to be a cohesive part of the process, personalizing the space along the way. "Being long-time design enthusiasts, [we] worked closely in collaboration with the teams led by Troy Kudlac, and Steven Shields, the builder," Linda says.

(TOP) A POLISHED GRAY-AND-BLACK TERRAZZO TEXTURED TILE FLOOR WAS USED THROUGHOUT THE HOME. (BOTTOM) HOMEOWNER LINDA ENJOYS THE SUNSHINE WITH PETS PETIE AND SADIE IN THEIR SPACIOUS BACKYARD.

ECO-FRIENDLY UPDATES

THESE MODERN-DAY UPGRADES OFFER BOTH COST AND SUSTAINABILITY BENEFITS THROUGHOUT THE HOME.

- R-38 roof: High insulation thickness means increased efficiency for heating and cooling.
- Highly efficient Fujitsu mini split system: High SEER rating helps with heating and cooling.
- Tankless water heater: Uses less energy and allows for constant supply of hot water.
- Rigid foam insulation: Reduces energy use and improves heating and cooling efficiency.
- Solar: A cost-saving option that utilizes the bright desert sunshine.
- Thermally broken high-efficiency windows: Increased efficiency for heating and cooling.

(TOP) A SPECIAL FEATURE OF THE HOME IS THE SEE-THROUGH TWO-WAY GAS FIREPLACE. "ONE CAN ENJOY THE BEAUTY AND WARMTH IN THE LIVING ROOM AND ON THE OUTSIDE SEATING AREA," SAYS LINDA. A CUSTOM WALNUT ACCENT WALL CONTRASTS WITH THE SLEEK TERRAZZO FLOORING.

(BOTTOM) SWEEPING GLASS WALLS AND DOORS CONNECT THE EXTERIOR TO THE INTERIOR, CAPTURING THE TRUE ESSENCE OF AN EICHLER HOME. SEATING IS ARRANGED TO MAXIMIZE VIEWS OF PLANTS AND HARDSCAPES THROUGHOUT THE YARD.

(TOP LEFT) "WE OPTED TO HAVE A LARGER POOL WITH A TANNING SHELF..." SAYS LINDA. "THE POOL HAS THREE PENCIL JETS FOR AMBIENCE, AS WELL AS A LARGE LUXURIOUS SPA ALONGSIDE THE POOL."

MAKE IT PERSONAL

"We personalized the home, choosing the bold, vivid MCM colors of avocado green, burnt orange, black, white and anthracite," says Linda. Along with the vibrant color scheme, Linda and Betty collaborated with the team on lighting and finishing selections, including the stunning Kerf cabinetry. The couple utilized both vintage and modern décor to achieve their impressive mid mod look.

While the footprint for the home was not changed, some of the floor plans were adjusted to better fit with Betty and Linda's lifestyle. "Instead of a large extra space, we added a powder room and laundry area so as to keep [the laundry] out of the garage. We also removed the wall between the dining area and kitchen to create a more 21st-century home and feel," explains Troy. The updates were completed with much thought toward the home's legacy. "Every change we make and have made, we looked through the lenses of Joseph [Eichler's] glasses: What would he do? He was a developer; he was in the business to make a profit but also to provide a functional and desirable place to live."

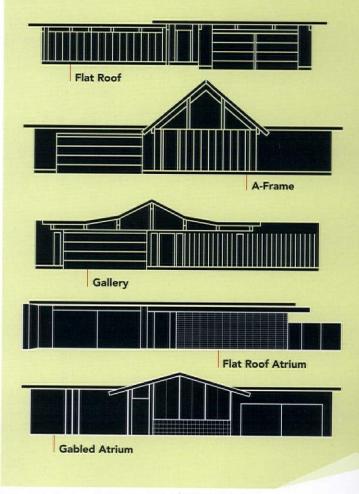

FIVE PALMS

With their love for a seamless indoor-outdoor connection, Linda and Betty knew that landscaping would also be integral to their home design. "[We] felt fortunate to be able to keep the five palm trees that were originally on the lot, which was no easy feat for the builders," admits Linda. Three of the large palms had to be transplanted, narrowly making it to their new locations, but the team's efforts paid off. Perhaps the success was due in part to Betty and Linda's decision to name the home "PS Five Palms" upon arrival at the empty lot. "The name and the five palm trees did survive and ultimately thrive," says Linda.

HOMECOMING

In early 2018, Betty, Linda and their two French bulldogs, Sadie and Petie, moved into their newly-built home, and they've been enjoying it ever since. "The home is bright and lively with a 360-degree beauty," says Linda. ®

Storage Smarts

Learn the tricks that'll help you find the best closet and cupboard solutions for your lifestyle and budget. By SARAH L. YOON

Photography courtesy of CALIFORNIA CLOSETS

STORAGE IS A MAGICIAN'S CARD TRICK. You've seen the show, you know it can be done, but how do you make it work for you? The National Manager of Design for California Closets, Erin Hardy, is a master of the craft. And she's ready to tip her hand.

EASE IN WITH ASSESSMENT

When you're surrounded by overflowing closets, storage feels impossible. The pros know, all you need to do is step back and look at the cards in play. Clarify storage categories, such as cleaning supplies, home maintenance tools and family entertainment. Once you've got a feel for what's in your home, test your space one category at a time. "You can learn a tremendous amount from physically seeing and assessing what's not working," Erin says.

Each individual's home deserves customization. Even if you have an average home with average storage space, you'll use it in your own unique way. "No two customers have the same design aesthetic and functional needs," Erin says. "Every custom storage design is a fascinating puzzle." The beauty of storage is that it's not a one-size-fixes-all solution. It's an art.

FIND YOUR PRIORITIES

Older homes especially have a collection of quirks that you need to assess. You might replace the jerry-rigged shelving from the previous owner, but treasure that double-door milk cubby. 1950s homes are notorious for small pantries, hall cupboards and bedroom closets. Some choose to expand storage via renovation, while others prefer less-invasive redesigns.

Simplify

A HOME OFFICE IS THE FAMILY CATCHALL THAT PILES UP FASTER THAN YOU CAN TIDY, BUT WITH STREAMLINED STORAGE, IT DOESN'T HAVE TO BE THAT WAY.

1. CLEAR THE CLUTTER.

No one wants their car double-parked, so your storage shouldn't be double-stacked. Creating margin makes it easy to put things away; toss or donate unnecessary extras.

2. KEEP A GOOD VISUAL. Use clear bins so you can see and remember what you've stored and where it is. If clear bins look too busy for your taste, consider monochrome boxes with specific labels.

3. ADJUST IN REAL-TIME. Your life is always changing, so create labels that are easily replaced or rewritten. A flexible, forgiving system will help you stay ahead of the mess.

4. ORGANIZE SUSTAINABLY. Instead of buying new, keep some gift boxes, pretty packages and tea tins that make their way into your home. You can swap out for size and style as needed.

If original 1950s closets spark joy, you may need to revisit Marie Kondo's minimalist methods. No number of storage solutions will change the math: If the volume of your scarves is greater than the volume of the space provided, they will not fit. Even if you vacuum seal and squish them in, will you ever go to the hassle of getting them out and steaming the wrinkles? Sometimes you need to pare down what you don't need in order to fully appreciate the things you love.

If you match up personal priorities with the puzzle pieces in front of you, it'll be easier to make the right decisions for your home. "We see all stages of life: first home buyers, downsizers, new babies on the way, you name it," Erin says. "The customization of our product line allows us the opportunity to accommodate any situation."

NO BUDGET IS EXACTLY THE SAME

Storage is never one-solution-fits-all, nor is it one-budget-fits-all. Some custom options might be outside what you're willing to pay, but that doesn't mean you need to sacrifice functionality. If you can't afford custom units, consider modular. If hardwood is out of range, look into wire.

No matter what solutions you buy into, be sure to invest in longevity. "A good base of a functional design in timeless materials can last a lifetime," Erin says, "and bolder accent choices can be swapped out over time as trends change." Sustainability matters. With fewer updates needed over the years, you'll both spend less and waste less. ®

Closer Calculations

$50,000 out of your savings, but few can opt for Hollywood luxury. According to Fixr, the national averages for installing storage systems is far more budget friendly:

- Wire: $100-$1,000
- Pine: $1,800-$3,000
- Hardwood: $4,000-$6,500

If you have an original reach-in, you can outfit your closet for even less. The starting cost depends entirely on how personalized you want it to be:

- Kit: $100
- Custom: $1,000

Don't forget to consider other cost factors, such as:

- Lighting
- Electrical wiring
- Paint
- Flooring

Moving from New York to San Jose, California, transported Mark Winkler and Jessica Endlich from a cold and snowy winter to warm spring in the blink of an eye.

They immediately fell in love with the outdoors in their new state and wanted their home to bring the outside in. That's when they first discovered Eichler homes. "Prior to moving to California, we'd never even heard of an Eichler," Jessica, a cofounder of an education non-profit, says. "Once we saw one, we were smitten."

When they first laid eyes on their home, they loved the "Zen and calming" vibe, as Mark, a scientist and engineer, calls it. They also couldn't go wrong with the fact that the local grade school was only a block away, meaning their three little ones, ages five, two and less than a year, would one day be able to walk to school. THE ENTRYWAY SHOWCASES ONE OF THE MANY SKYLIGHTS IN THE HOME. "EICHLER HOMES HAVE A LOT OF SKYLIGHTS," SAYS MEGAN BLAINE AIA, PRINCIPAL ARCHITECT AT BLAINE ARCHITECTS. "THE ONE IN THE ATRIUM ISN'T A SKYLIGHT— IT'S JUST A BIG HOLE IN THE ROOF—OPEN AIR. THE ONE IN THE HALLWAY IS ORIGINAL TO THE HOME. THE SKYLIGHT IN THE SHOWER IS BRAND NEW, AND IT REALLY OPENS UP THAT BATHROOM WHILE PROVIDING MAXIMUM PRIVACY."

"Renovating an Eichler is a long, slow process, but it was worth it!"

(TOP) THE SYSTEM OF FOLDING GLASS WALLS CREATES AN INSTANTLY BREEZY FEEL IN THE HOME. MEGAN SAYS, "THIS NANAWALL SYSTEM IS ACTUALLY OPEN AIR. IT OPENS THE WALL BETWEEN THE KITCHEN AND THE ATRIUM, WHICH DOESN'T HAVE A ROOF OVER IT. WE MAINTAINED THE TRADITIONAL LARGE ROOF OVERHANGS SUPPORTED BY BEAUTIFUL EXPOSED BEAMS SO THEY CAN OPEN THE NANAWALL TO THE ATRIUM EVEN WHEN IT'S RAINING—AND THEY DO!"

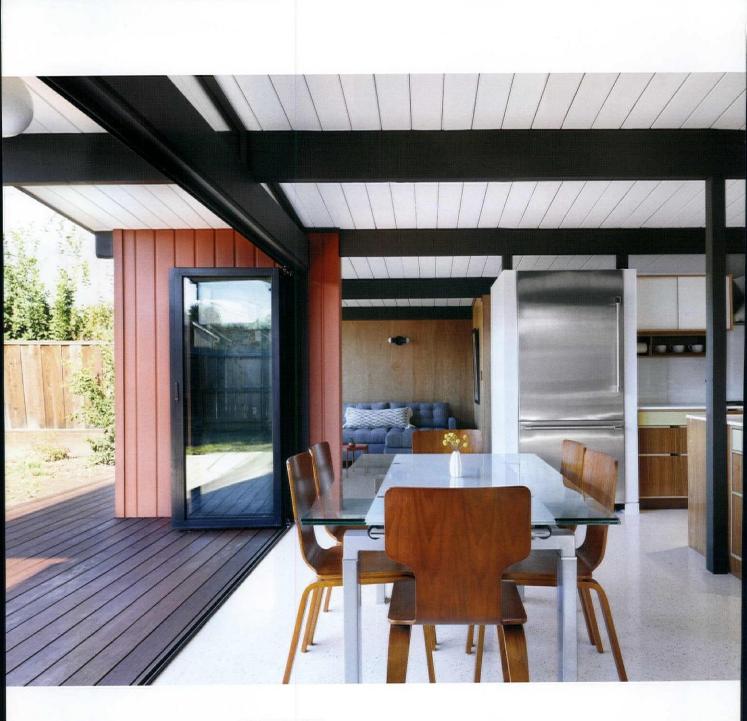

Located in a tract of Eichler homes and designed by revered midcentury architects A. Quincy Jones and Frederick Emmons, the home was entirely original when the family moved in. But unfortunately, much of it was falling apart. The stove was so old that they could no longer replace the electric burners. There were only four ungrounded electrical circuits. And the kitchen was literally held together with duct tape. That's when Megan Blaine AIA, Principal Architect at Blaine Architects, came to the rescue.

FROM TOP TO BOTTOM

Helming her architecture firm alongside her husband, Keith, Megan was in this renovation process for the long haul: The design took 10 months and the construction lasted 14 months, which totaled two years. "It had been rented for several years, so it was in disrepair," Megan says.

First, Mark and Jessica wanted to add an addition. Then the kitchen went to pieces. With a baby on the way, the couple began thinking about needing more space, so a playroom and office were added to the project. The couple and the team wanted to honor the Eichler design along the way.

"We turned the kitchen 90 degrees and extended the front wall five feet to create a dual chef kitchen where they both could work simultaneously and not bump into each other," Megan says. "We moved the laundry room and made it super-efficient and compact. We added another full bathroom, and we extended out with a new office and playroom and, true to Eichler, a new atrium."

(TOP) WORKING WITH SHARA LEE AT KERF DESIGN, THE COUPLE ACHIEVED THE KITCHEN AND CABINETRY OF THEIR DREAMS. "THE CABINETS ARE A GREAT EXAMPLE OF SOMETHING WE FOUND THAT WAS MODERN BUT FIT THE MIDCENTURY VIBE," THE HOMEOWNERS SAY.

(BOTTOM, LEFT) THE KITCHEN INCLUDES SOMETHING CALLED AN "APPLIANCE GARAGE" THAT HAS BECOME A USEFUL ADDITION. MEGAN SAYS, "[MARK AND JESSICA] REGULARLY USE A BIG BLENDER, A KITCHENAID MIXER AND A COFFEE MAKER, BUT THEY DIDN'T WANT TO SEE THE APPLIANCES OR HAVE THEM TAKE UP TOO MUCH ROOM. SO WE BUILT A SNEAKY APPLIANCE GARAGE BEHIND THE UPPER CABINETS WHERE THE BACKSPLASH WOULD NORMALLY GO."

(BOTTOM, RIGHT) THESE CABINETS AND CUBBIES ARE A FAR CRY FROM THE CABINETS THE COUPLE SAW WHEN FIRST STEPPING INTO THE HOUSE. "THE KITCHEN CABINETS WERE, IN SOME PLACES, HELD TOGETHER BY DUCT TAPE," MARK SAYS. "THE KITCHEN WAS A ROOM THAT WE PUT A LOT OF THOUGHT AND RESEARCH INTO. WE WANTED SOMETHING THAT WAS FUN AND EFFICIENT FOR TWO PEOPLE TO COOK IN SIMULTANEOUSLY."

SUMMER 2020 • THE RENOVATION GUIDE atomic-ranch.com 43

Megan adds that they replaced the radiant floor system with a new one and replaced all the windows and wall surfaces. The entire home was reroofed and rewired. All the old mahogany was swapped with new mahogany panels. Everything was insulated. And the exterior siding was replaced.

Since the couple adored the indoor/outdoor focus of the home, they chose to reinforce that feel through a NanaWall system, a bifold door and operable glass wall system that can be opened fully to the outdoors. This achieved a "smooth flow between the backyard and entertaining space," as Jessica says. A second system of bifold glass walls provides additional play space to the couple's three young children.

> AS THE SUN BEGINS TO SET ON THIS EICHLER HOME, THE NANAWALL SYSTEM INVITES IN THE WARM EVENING AIR, SETTING A DREAMY TONE FOR FAMILY MEALS.

"The kitchen was a room that we put a lot of thought and research into. We wanted something that was fun and efficient for two people to cook in simultaneously." THE BATHROOM IS A STUDY IN MIDCENTURY TOUCHES. THE VARIETY OF TILES FROM FIRE-CLAY TILE BRINGS VISUAL INTEREST TO THE SPACE, WHILE A FLOATING VANITY BY KERF DESIGNS OFFERS STORAGE.

JESSICA KNEW THAT SHE WANTED A FUN PLAYROOM FOR HER CHILDREN THAT ALSO HONORED MIDCENTURY DESIGN. "WE WANTED A PLAY SPACE FOR THE KIDS THAT WASN'T IN THE MIDDLE OF THE REST OF THE ENTER-TAINING SPACE, SO ADULTS CAN MIN-GLE WHILE KIDS PLAY AND MAKE NOISE IN A SEPARATE ZONE," SHE SAYS.

A FAMILY-FRIENDLY PARADISE

Mark and Jessica share that "functional and fun" changes were made with the kids in mind. The house was made safer by installing modern electrical systems and changing out the wood-burning fireplace for a gas insert. The kids' bedrooms were constructed in drywall made to withstand markers, toy storage was added and even a fantasy playroom and backyard treehouse were included.

At the end of the team's hard work is a home that the entire family loves. The couple puts it perfectly when they say, "Renovating an Eichler is a long, slow process, but it was worth it!" ®

SPLURGE

As a growing family, Mark and Jessica wanted a kitchen filled with modern conveniences and space to cook together. Seattle's Kerf Design was perfect for the spacious cabinets and handy storage options they desired, so they chose to devote a sizable portion of the budget to the kitchen. Another top priority for the couple was expanding the living space to the outdoors, so they could use more of their property as a living area. A system of folding glass doors from NanaWall allowed an easy transition from interior to exterior.

SAVE

Although the home received a considerable overhaul, original features, such as the fireplace, were left intact and in turn softened the bottom line. Mark and Jessica also embraced a mix of vintage and new décor throughout the home—they were even gifted their dining room set from the previous owner.

HOUSE OF A DIFFERENT COLOR

"The color of the exterior siding is really exciting and new," Megan says. "I feel like everyone paints their Eichler homes dark gray, and I was excited by the challenge of Mark and Jessica asking for theirs not to be gray so it stood out." The atrium is another distinctive piece of this home. Since this Eichler abode was one of the first in San Jose, it was built before atriums were commonly added to Eichler structures. It was constructed by cutting a large hole in the roof and adding interior spaces around three sides. The playroom, office and kitchen all open to the atrium.

Just a little over 10 minutes from the Texas state capitol building lies a midcentury treasure that's been returned to its former glory. Located in Austin, the home was designed by venerated architect Roland Roessner, who taught at the University of Texas and designed marvelously modern residences around the area.

When the homeowners discovered this midcentury home in excellent condition, they knew they wanted to put the renovations in the right hands. That's when they called on Austin and San Antonio-based design firm Clayton & Little—and Paul Clayton, Principal, and Emily Little, FAIA, helmed the project.

(TOP) THE FIREPLACE AND ADJACENT SHELVING ARE NEW ADDITIONS, "MAKING THIS THE CENTRAL HEARTH OF THE HOME" AS THE ARCHITECTS DESCRIBE IT. THE HERMAN MILLER SOFA AND COFFEE TABLE ARE ORIGINAL TO THE HOME AND WERE GIVEN TO THE NEW OWNERS, WHICH THEY THEN RESTORED AND REUSED IN THE SAME ROOM.

COMPARED TO THE ORIGINAL SPACE, MORE LIGHT CAN NOW ENTER THROUGH SEVERAL WINDOWS THAT WERE ADDED DURING THE RENOVATION. THE DESIGN TEAM DISCOVERED HIGH CLERESTORY WINDOWS ON THE SOUTH WALL OF THE LIVING ROOM IN THE ORIGINAL DRAWINGS AND SKETCHES, WHICH HAD BEEN CUT FROM THE PROJECT DUE TO COST. THESE WINDOWS WERE REINSTATED DURING REMODELING TO COMPLETE ROESSNER'S VISION

(TOP) THE KITCHEN REMAINED IN ITS ORIGINAL LOCATION, BUT IT WAS GIVEN A THOROUGHLY MODERN UPDATE TO BRING IT INTO THE 21ST CENTURY. FUNCTIONALITY AND CONVENIENCE WERE HIGH PRIORITIES WHEN DESIGNING THE SPACE, WHICH INCLUDES CUSTOM DRAWER INSERTS, SPECIALTY HARDWARE, TOP-OF-THE-LINE FIXTURES AND A TOUCH-ACTIVATED OVEN. (BOTTOM) MIDCENTURY APPEAL CAN BE SEEN IN EVERY CORNER OF THIS HOME, INCLUDING THE DINING ROOM AND KITCHEN. THE ARCHITECTS EXPLAIN, "DUE TO THE EXTENT OF CONSTRUCTION, IT BECAME UNREALISTIC TO SALVAGE THE CABINETS AT THE NORTH END OF THE DINING ROOM, BUT THE SAME LAYOUT WAS REPRODUCED IN THE NEW MAHOGANY CABINETS TO KEEP THE ORIGINAL DESIGN."

THE MASTER BEDROOM "PROVIDES A SENSE OF RETREAT AS WELL AS EXPANSION," THE ARCHITECTS SAY. "ONE SIDE IS ENVELOPED IN WARM MAHOGANY WHILE THE OTHER HAS AN EXPANSIVE WINDOW OPENING UP TO THE PRIVATE COURTYARD AND POOL."

After one year of design and one year of construction, the home still holds on to many of its original features but has been reimagined with more overall square footage.

MAHOGANY IS THE DEFINING CHARAC-TERISTIC OF THE MASTER BATH. IT INCORPORATES CLERESTORY WIN-DOWS TO OPTIMIZE NATURAL LIGHT AND SPOTLIGHTS PLENTY OF CUSTOM MILLWORK PIECES, LIKE THE SLIDING MIRROR PANELS AT THE VANITY, HIDDEN POWER STRIPS BELOW THE SINK MIRROR, A FLUSH INSET MAHOGANY MEDICINE CABINET AND FLOATING VANITY CABINETS WITH INDIRECT LIGHTING.

A REINVIGORATED HOME

The home had been taken care of so well over the years that it was in nearly the same condition it was in back in 1956 when it was constructed. The current owners purchased the home from the original—and only—previous owners, who worked with Roessner as they made their dream home come to life.

After one year of design and one year of construction, the home still holds on to many of its original features but has been reimagined with more overall square footage. Throughout the remodeling process, the home was converted from a three-bedroom, two-bath structure with a carport and storage to a one-bedroom home with a full bath and powder room plus a two-bedroom, one-bath guesthouse with a carport and storage. Although the architects stuck to the original floorplan in the primary areas, additions were made to personalize the home to the preferences of the new owners.

Emily explains, "Two additions include a utility room and office, set back from the front facade of the home. The other addition was a shift of the carport toward the front of the house in order to add the two-bedroom, one-bath guest accommodations concealed from view behind the carport."

She goes on to explain that clerestory windows were added to the den, which offered more natural light in the space, along with a new fireplace. The recessed front entry was brought forward to create an enclosed entry hall while keeping it within the original footprint. Structural modifications to allow the ceiling framing to open up the plan at the kitchen and living room were also considered significant changes. This approach allowed all mechanical equipment to be placed on the roof. "The plan of the public areas of the house remained the same, with minor modifications at the kitchen and bathrooms," Emily says.

(TOP) TODAY THE EXTERIOR MIRRORS HOW IT LOOKED OVER 60 YEARS AGO, WITH ITS CANTILEVERED CONCRETE BALCONY WRAPPING THE FRONT OF THE HOUSE AND ORIGINAL EXTERIOR MATERIALS. (LEFT) A LITTLE SLICE OF PARADISE RESIDES ON THE HOME'S PROPERTY. THE POOL IS AN ADDITION TO THE HOME AND RESTS BETWEEN THE MAIN HOUSE AND THE GUEST HOUSE AND CARPORT.

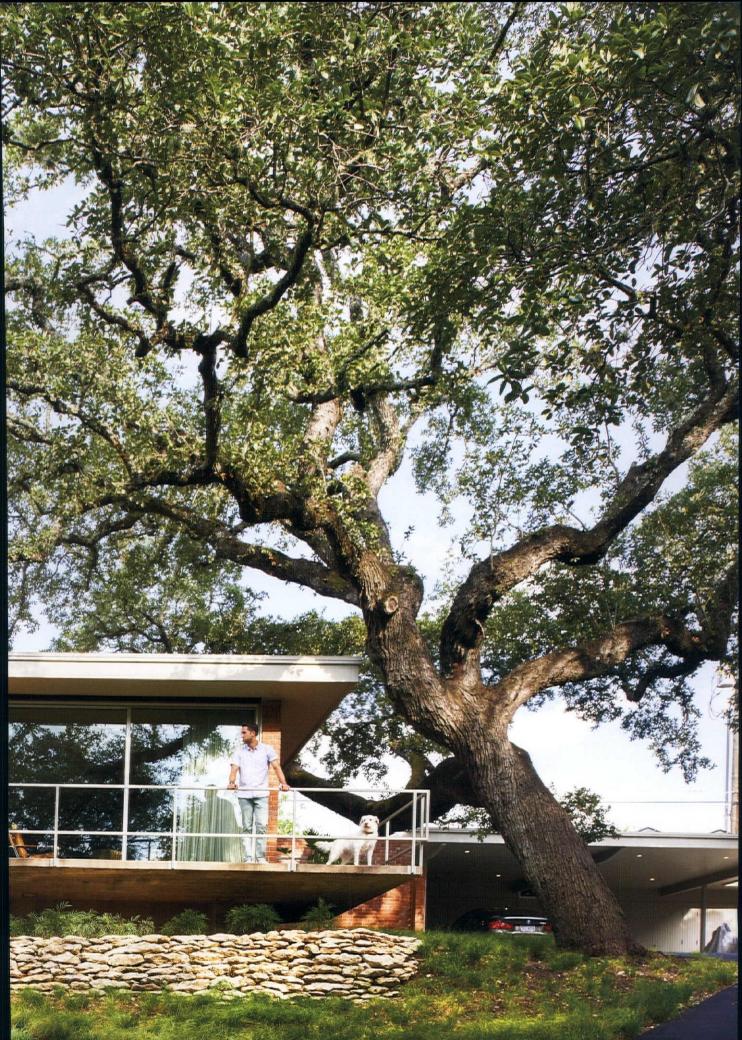

IMPROVING ON THE ORIGINAL

Many of the previous materials and elements throughout the house were preserved during the renovation process, but some aspects were improved upon to make the home sleeker and more current day.

Emily shares that one of the top goals of the project was to maintain "the street appearance and massing of the original home while expanding the footprint significantly," something they achieved through the addition of the guest house and additions to the main house.

They also harked back to the original drawings and sketches made by Roessner himself. The architects decided to bring this first vision to life in a variety of ways, including the addition of high windows in the living room, an aspect of the drawings that didn't make it into the final design. "They're assumed to have been valueengineered out of the house during construction," Emily says.

Between the updates that were made and the respect paid to the original qualities, the homeowners are satisfied and happy with how this midcentury home turned out. Emily sums it up well, saying, "We do not know of any planned changes to the home. They were intent upon doing it once and doing it right."

SPLURGE

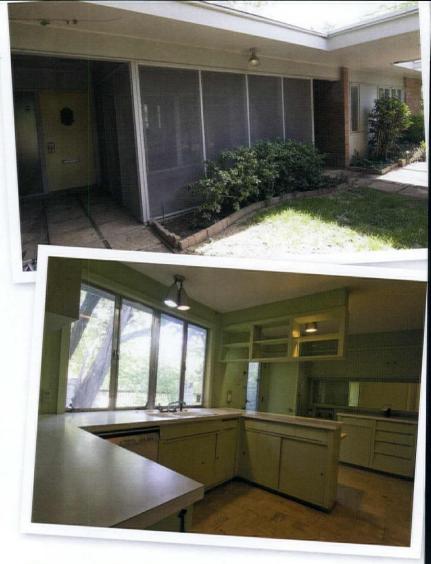

Emily says, "As the project evolved, the owners became more and more committed to the purity of the renovation, respecting original materials and detailing and holding a high standard for excellence." This is evidenced in the high-quality mahogany paneling and trim seen throughout most of the home, along with a custom color that was created for the electric switches, outlets and covers to match the mahogany and brick.

SAVE

The architects explain, "During design, the owners chose to reduce the size of the proposed addition and eliminate one of the two separate offices. A much smaller area was created within the original footprint to provide a small office getaway with a door and window." During the renovation, they also reused the redwood ceiling at the carport, as well as the bathtub and lavatory, which were relocated to the new guest bath. Several light fixtures were also reused.

GOING LUXE

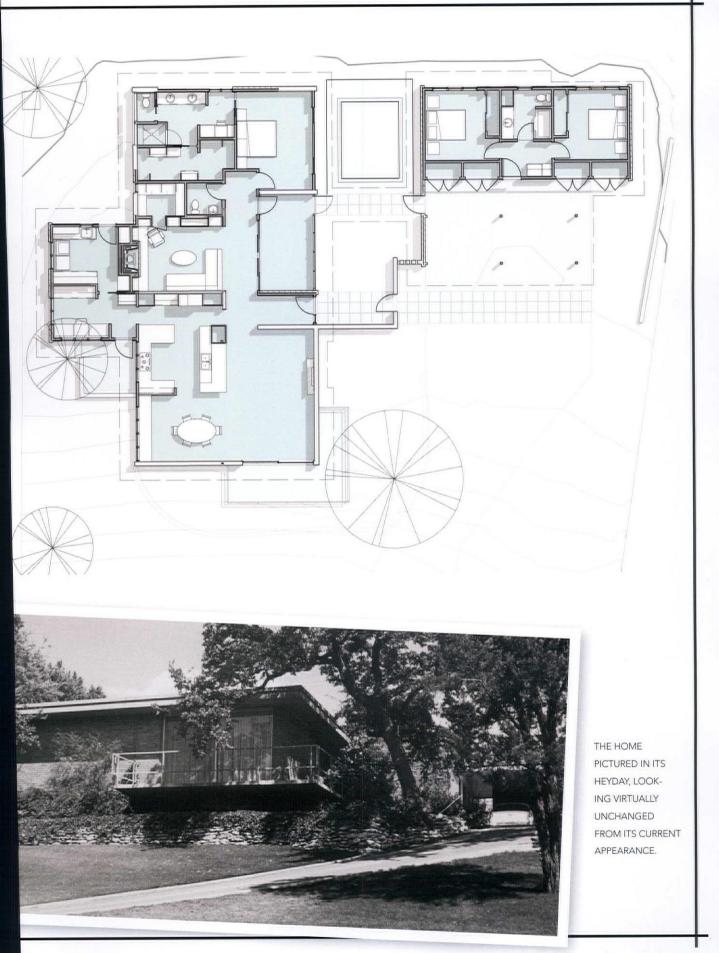

The standout features of this reinvigorated midcentury home took it from standard materials and details used back in the day to a more upscale version of the original vision. Emily shares that the original owners' daughter said her parents were "conservative in every sense of the word," and the original house conveyed that. Although the previous footprint of the home came in at 1,773 square feet, after the renovation, it was transformed into a largescale abode and guesthouse still brimming with midcentury flair at 3,595 square feet. Character-defining elements were enhanced to stand out even more, such as the mahogany paneling in the interior and the original sloped front cabinets. As Emily explains, "The new owners have enhanced the original design and brought in more refined materials, such as quartzite countertops in lieu of plastic laminate and cork floors instead of carpet on slab."

(TOP) THE ARCHITECTS DESCRIBE THE STATE OF THE HOME WHEN THEY FIRST LAID EYES ON IT, SAYING, "THE HOUSE WAS IN VIRTUALLY ORIGINAL CONDITION WITH MODEST MAINTENANCE OVER THE YEARS. DETAILS WERE LEFT INTACT FOR OUR CONSIDERATION TO RESTORE OR INTERPRET. OUR CLIENTS PURCHASED THE HOUSE FROM THE ORIGINAL OWNERS, WHO WORKED DIRECTLY WITH ROESSNER ON THE DESIGN OF THE HOME."

(ABOVE) THE RENOVATED KITCHEN STILL LIVES IN THE SPACE WHERE THE OLD KITCHEN RESIDED, AND SOME STRUCTURAL CHANGES WERE MADE. EMILY SAYS, "THE FULL-HEIGHT MAHOGANY PANELED CENTRAL ELEMENT BETWEEN THE KITCHEN AND LIVING ROOM WAS LOWERED TO COUNTER HEIGHT WITH A BAR TO OPEN THE CONNECTION BETWEEN THE ROOMS. A FULL-HEIGHT PORTION REMAINED AT ONE END FOR KITCHEN EQUIPMENT."

> WHILE THESE CABINETS LOOK BRAND NEW, THEY'VE ACTUALLY BEEN RESURFACED. "I SUGGESTED THAT WE USE TEAK TO GIVE US A CLASSIC DANISH MODERN MATERIAL," SAYS BUILDER AVIAN ROGERS, "AND IT TURNED OUT BEAUTIFULLY."

> > 1. Ach AA

After first seeing this 1,152 square-foot home in Palm

Desert, homeowner Stephanie Yates knew that in spite of some poor design updates over the years, it had good bones and could become the desert escape she and her husband, Bryan, were looking for. "It had this wonderful, centerbeam pitched roof with triangular clerestory windows in front and an original block wall," Stephanie says of elements she first noticed from the street.

THE TEAK WALL UNIT BY ERIK BUCH WAS PURCHASED BY STEPHANIE'S PARENTS IN 1964. SINCE IT IS MODULAR, SHE HAD USED PIECES OF IT IN PREVIOUS HOMES, BUT SHE SAYS HER FATHER BEAMED WITH JOY WHEN HE SAW IT ASSEMBLED ONCE AGAIN IN HER PALM DESERT HOME. After purchasing the home, Stephanie enlisted the help of Avian Rogers, the dynamic builder behind Moderne Homes, and the two tackled the project with gusto and even became friends in the process. "We were on the same page in creating something really cool out of something that was really horrible," Avian says.

FROM DRAB TO FAB

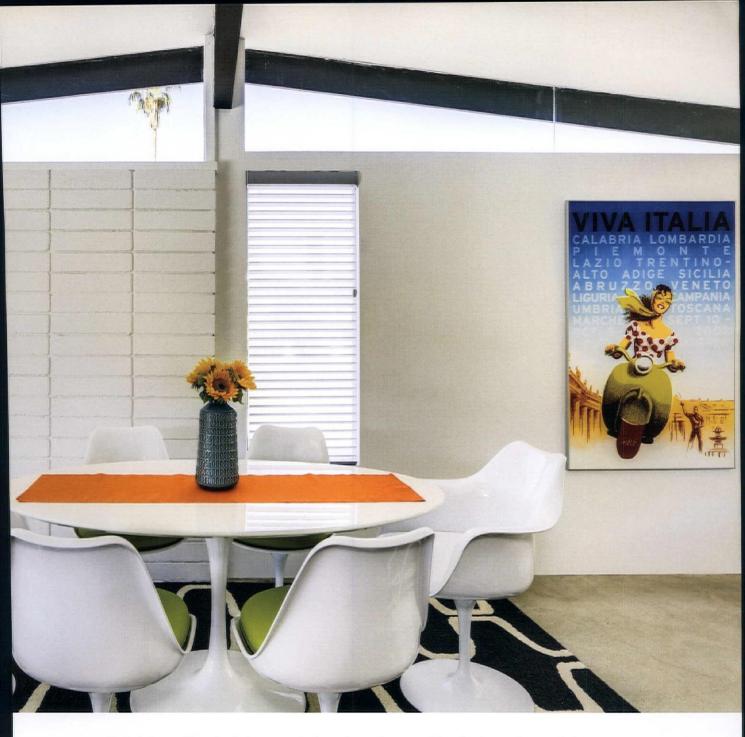

The renovation changes were so dramatic that the finished project is hardly recognizable as the same house. Avian removed a beam and partial wall hanging from the ceiling that made the kitchen feel closed off and even changed the location of the front door. Prior to the renovation, the main entrance was located off the driveway, almost directly below the house's center beam. "I convinced her to eliminate that door and make it a slim midcentury-looking window," Avian says. They then relocated the main entrance to the side of the house and created an entry courtyard, allowing for even more privacy and a large picture window.

Both Avian and Stephanie bemoan the home's previous condition, but beyond poor design decisions that had been made over the years, one of the strangest elements they encountered was the laundry situation. "They had the washer and dryer literally outside by the kitchen window," Avian says. Utilizing some extra space from two different closets, she made room for a stacked washer and dryer inside, just off the hallway.

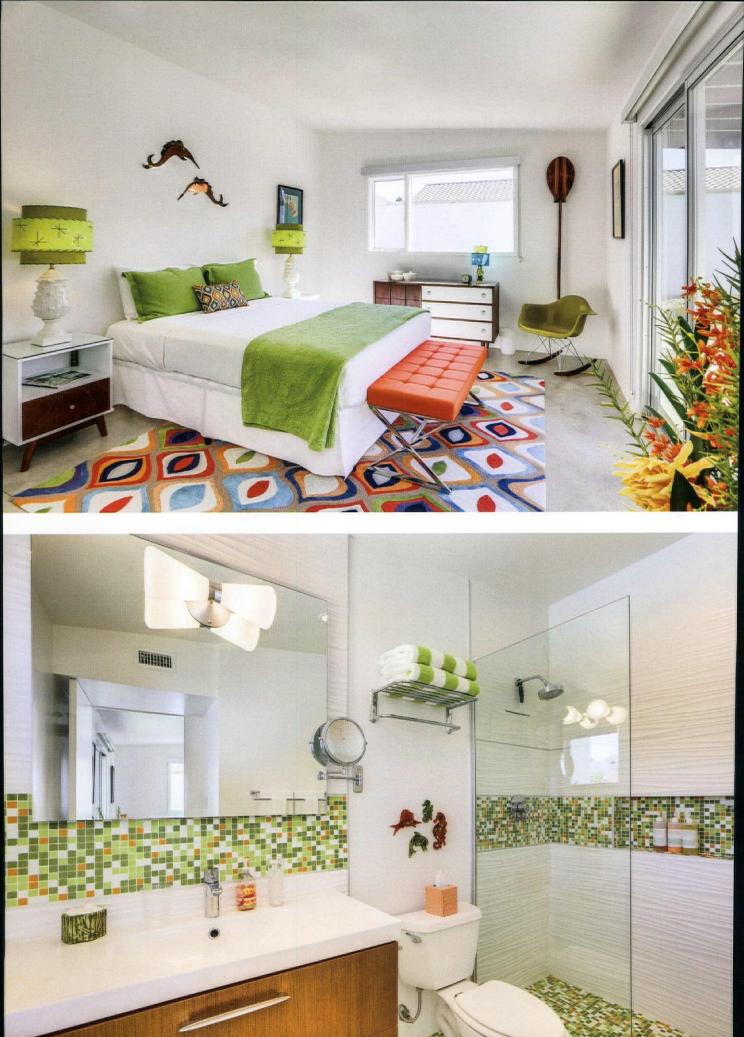

INDOOR OUTDOOR CONNECTION

"One of the main objectives was to open the house up to the fabulous view of the backyard," Avian says. The addition of a dramatic, 16-foot sliding door as well as other large windows and sliders provides a unique connection to the backyard, a space that is the heartbeat of the home for Stephanie. "It still has its original 1950s swimming pool, which I love," she says. "The shape and proportions of the pool just go so ideally with the house." The couple worked with Avian to add an in-ground spa and firepit, and a sweet final touch to the yard was the addition of a bocce ball lawn for a year-round, artificial splash of green.

The renovation changes were so dramatic that the finished project is hardly recognizable as the same house.

BEGINNING TO END

Part of what drew Stephanie to the house in the first place was a row of tropical plumeria trees in the backyard. Afraid they wouldn't survive the renovation process, she took some cuttings from the trees, planted them in pots and kept them alive at her Los Angeles home for the duration of the renovation. Once everything was complete, she replanted them at the house, and now every year they bloom to create even more of a lush oasis. "That's where the house gets its name 'Plumeria Sands,'" Stephanie says.

SAVE

A lot of savings happened in the kitchen. Instead of replacing the cabinets, Avian had a carpenter resurface both the cabinets and the base of the kitchen island with a classy teak. Instead of drilling through concrete slab to get water and electricity to the kitchen island, they simply decided to go without. Another money saver was the polished concrete floors. "They're actually cheaper than most tiles, but they look more expensive than that," Avian says. "It's a lot of style for the money."

SPLURGE

At one point Avian was trying to work with the existing bathroom features, but in the end, everything, including a bathtub, came out and was replaced. The bold and modern result was well worth it though. Another bathroom splurge was the turquoise tile in the hall bathroom. Stephanie purchased it herself at Mission Tile West in Pasadena, and it covers the whole wall. "I just wanted to do something bold," she says. "I fell for the provocative shape of those tiles and selected a color combination that felt like water in motion."

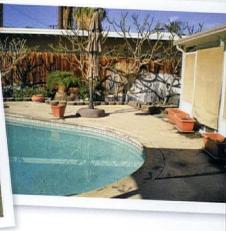

BARELY INDOORS

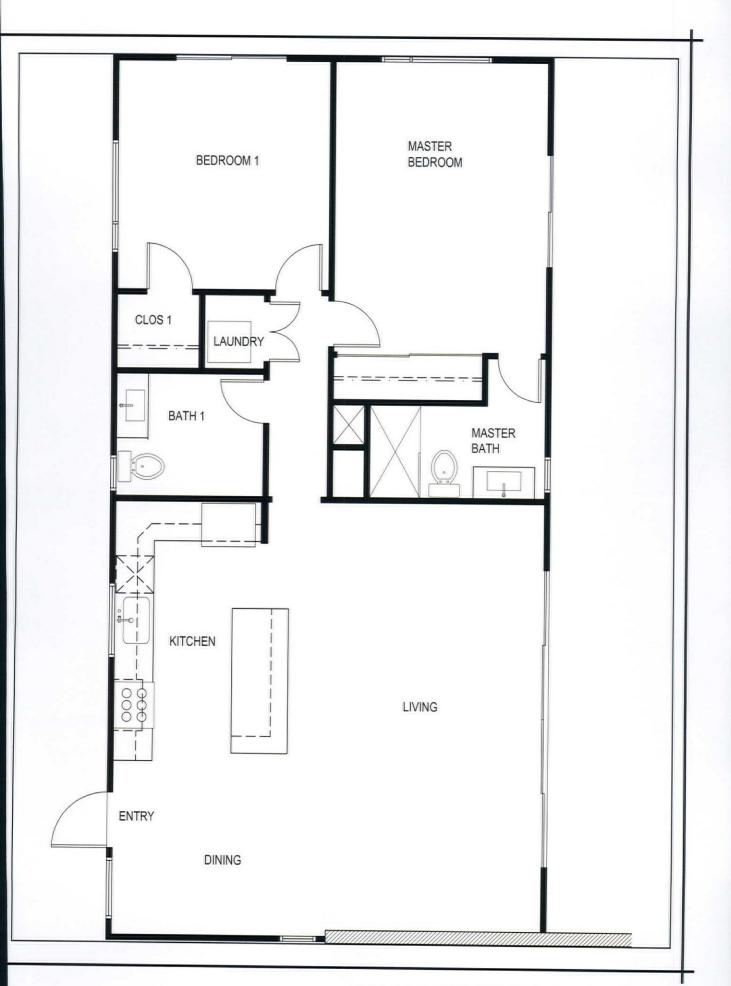

The entry courtyard and position of the house allow for a lot of privacy. "Because the house is not really exposed to the street, it gave us the freedom to have all of these glass doors and big windows and a sense of barely being indoors," Stephanie says. The home also still has its original pool from the 1950s. It needed quite a bit of work, but it's one of the homeowner's favorite features. The in-ground spa was added after the renovation of the house was complete.

idyllic surroundings and proximity to work, Carrie and Sean Taylor knew that if they purchased the 1974 two-story home, they'd have to go through renovations. They also knew the process would be worthwhile. "We felt that this house design was extremely interesting and that if we worked with the right team, there was an opportunity to enhance and update it without losing its essence," the Taylors say. THROUGH THE HOME'S FRONT DOOR, VISITORS CAN WALK STRAIGHT DOWN A HALLWAY, PASS THE BEDROOMS AND A BATHROOM AND REACH THE KITCHEN AND DINING AREAS. OR THEY CAN MAKE A QUICK LEFT AT THE ENTRY AND WALK INTO THE LIVING ROOM, WHICH FLOWS INTO THE DINING AND KITCHEN AREAS, AND TAKE IN THE BEAUTIFUL NATURAL SURROUNDINGS.

(OPPOSITE) POST-RENOVATION, THE FIREPLACE WALL IS ONCE AGAIN THE STAR ATTRACTION IN THIS MIDCENTURY HOME. ITS WARPED PLY-WOOD PANELING WAS REPLACED WITH WALNUT SHIPLAP, AND A NEW TILE SURROUND WAS INSTALLED, WITH EVERYTHING LOOKING LIKE IT HAS BEEN IN THE HOME SINCE IT WAS BUILT IN THE 1970S.

The kitchen and dining area was the starting point for a project that would stretch out over eight months and eventually encompass the top floor of the home. "To be honest, the renovation started with one simple idea: We initially wanted to remove the wall between the kitchen and the dining room," the Taylors say. "In the original design this wall broke up the space in a very awkward way. We realized early on that we needed help, as we both wanted to respect but also enhance the original design."

ASSEMBLING THE TEAM

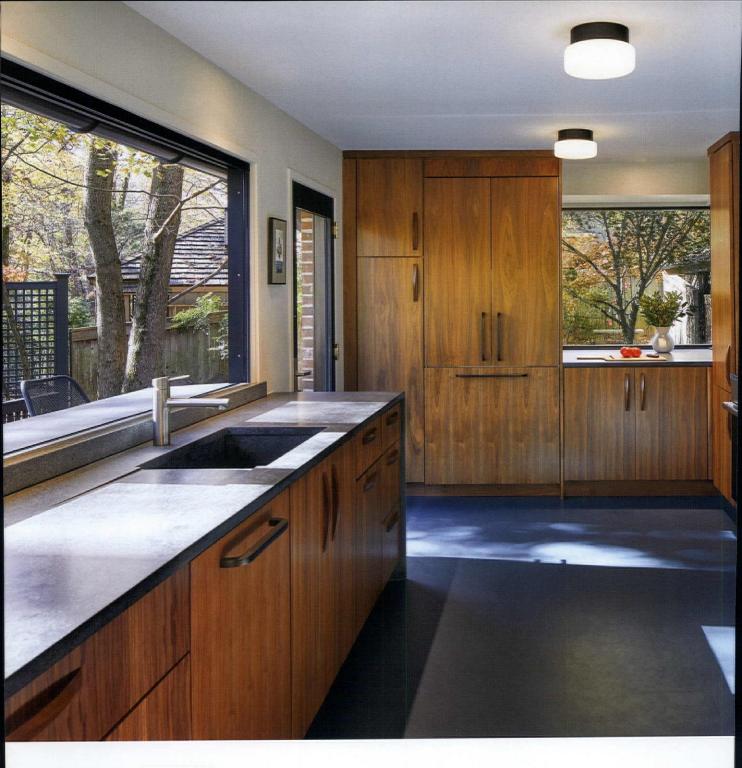

The Taylors deliberated over the kind of help they'd need to unify the kitchen and dining space while respecting the original design aesthetic of their home. "We first considered whether we wanted to work with a design/build firm or an architecture firm, and after some initial interviews, we felt that we wanted to focus on the design carefully and thoroughly and find an architect who shared that goal," they say. "We also wanted someone that had a strong vision for how the original design of the house could be enhanced but could also listen carefully to our ideas/needs."

Lou Balodemas and Balodemas Architects were the Taylors' choice for their renovation project. Heb-N-Co Construction was selected as the contractor.

WITH THE WALNUT SHIPLAP FROM THE FIREPLACE WALL NOW CARRIED THROUGH ONTO THE PONY WALL ENCASING THE STAIRS, THE DINING AND LIVING SPACES ARE UNITED STYLISTICALLY. WHETHER RELAXING IN THE LIVING AREA OR ENJOYING A MEAL IN THE DINING SPACE, FAMILY AND VISITORS CAN ENJOY THE BEAUTIFUL NATURAL SURROUNDINGS, THANKS TO THE LARGE SLIDING GLASS DOORS.

The fireplace, a stunning focal point of the upstairs, had warped plywood paneling that's since been replaced with walnut shiplap that carries over onto the pony wall surrounding the staircase.

GETTING TO WORK

With their team in place, the Taylors were ready to take on their second Midcentury Modern home renovation, having previously lived in a 1964 split-level that they'd also updated. Growing past a kitchen remodel, the renovation of their 1974 home included work on the exterior as well as the interior.

Though the breaker box needed updating and the sub-slab ductwork some maintenance, the home was in overall decent condition, with many original features. Lou Balodemas guided the Taylors on what was worth keeping and what should be replaced in the home, advice he shares with MCM homeowners. "Make sure it's worth saving," he advises. "In our case, the original builder spent money on the exterior, cladding it entirely in brick and framing an interesting roof line, but installed some builder-grade finishes on the inside. The veneered wood paneling was in need of an upgrade, so we didn't hesitate to replace it."

THE HOMEOWNERS ENJOY THE CUSTOM LOOK OF THEIR NEW KITCHEN CABINETS AND THE NON-CUSTOM PRICE TAG. "WE ALSO CONSIDERED CUSTOM-BUILT CAB-INETRY AT AN EARLY STAGE, BUT TOOK THE MORE COST-EFFECTIVE OPTION WITH BRIGHTON CABINETS, AND WE SPLURGED A BIT BY ADDING WALNUT DRAWER PULLS," THE TAYLORS SAY. "THIS GAVE US THE CUS-TOM CABINET LOOK WITHOUT THE CUSTOM PRICE. WE ARE HAPPY WITH THE RESULTS; THEY LOOK GREAT AND ARE WELL-MADE."

UPDATES WERE MADE TO BOTH THE HOME'S EXTERI-OR AND INTERIOR. FOR THE EXTERIOR, THE TEAM DECIDED TO REPLACE THE WINDOWS, REBUILD AND WIDEN THE WALKWAY BRIDGE, REPLACE THE ROOFING AND GUTTERS, PAINT THE TRIM AND INSTALL BOLLARD LIGHTING ALONG THE DRIVEWAY.

A COHESIVE SPACE

The kitchen featured a mix of new and original pieces, none in great shape, so everything was upgraded when the space was unified with the dining area. The fireplace, a stunning focal point of the upstairs, had warped plywood paneling that's since been replaced with walnut shiplap that carries over onto the pony wall surrounding the staircase. The original staircase was obstructive to the interior's refresh, so it was replaced with a custom model that has era-appropriate styling. Single-paned windows were swapped out in favor of less-drafty contemporary models that would keep the cold out and let the views of nature in.

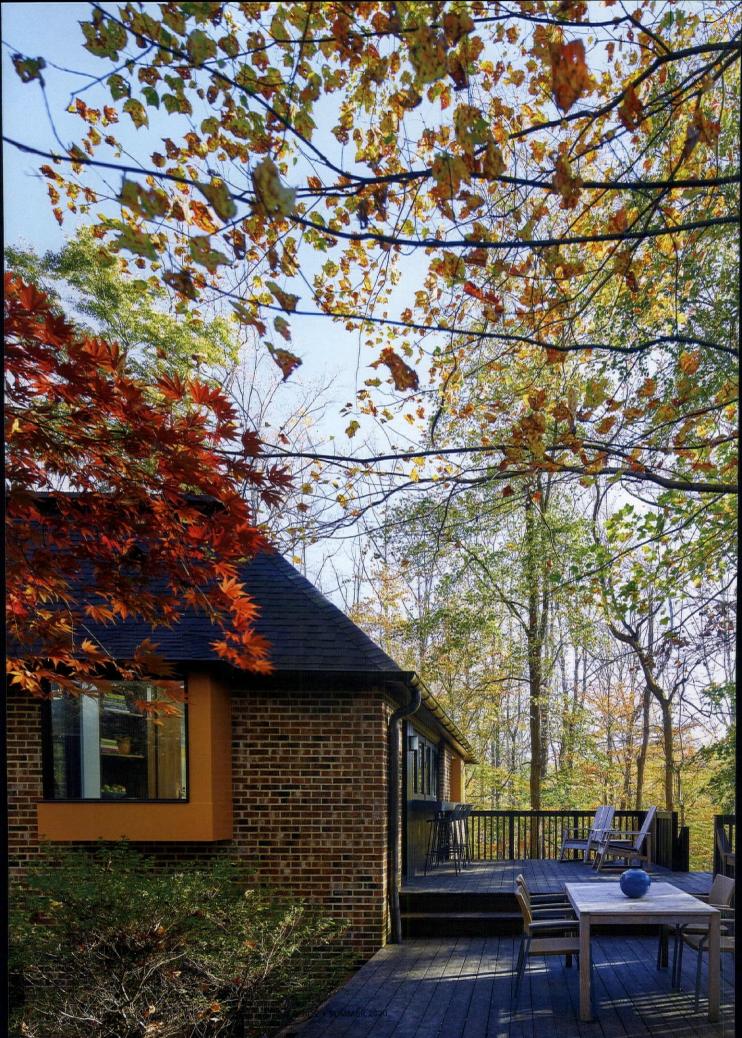

The Taylors have lived with their new space for more than a year now, taking full advantage of the open flow of the communal spaces on the upper floor of their home, whether hanging out with their young son or entertaining friends.

(TOP, LEFT) NEW STAIRS WERE CUSTOM-FABRICATED FOR THE HOME, AN INVESTMENT OF TIME AND MONEY THE HOMEOWNERS FEEL WAS WELL WORTH SPLURGING ON. FROM UPSTAIRS, GUESTS DESCEND THROUGH AN OPENING CLAD IN THE SAME WAL-NUT SHIPLAP USED ON THE FIREPLACE TO THE DOWNSTAIRS HALLWAY, WHICH FEATURES CUSTOM CONCRETE TILE THAT LEADS TO A SLIDING GLASS DOOR, WHICH OFFERS ANOTHER LOOK AT THE NEIGHBORING WOODS.

(BOTTOM) OPENING UP THE KITCHEN WAS THE STARTING POINT FOR THIS RENOVATION AND HAS MADE THE UPSTAIRS MUCH MORE FUNCTIONAL FOR THE HOMEOWNERS. "TAKING DOWN THE WALL BETWEEN THE KITCHEN AND THE DINING ROOM MADE A GREAT SPACE FOR US AND OUR SIX-YEAR-OLD SON," THE TAYLORS SAY. "HE PLAYS ON AND AROUND THE DINING TABLE AND THE BUILT-IN DINING CREDENZA."

DURING THE WARMER MONTHS, THE HOMEOWNERS CAN PUSH BACK THE ACCORDION WINDOWS IN THE KITCHEN AND TAKE ADVANTAGE OF THEIR OUTDOOR EATING SPACE. "WHEN THE WEATHER IS RIGHT, WE LOVE OPENING THE LARGE ACCORDION WINDOW IN THE KITCHEN AND SITTING AT THE OUTDOOR COUNTER, WHILE ONE OR MORE OF US IS COOKING," THE TAYLORS SAY. "IT'S A FUN ENTERTAINING SPOT AS WELL—THE WINDOW IS A GREAT CONVERSATION PIECE ON ITS OWN."

> "There were some elements that we thought were beautifully done and couldn't be further optimized," they say. "Other aspects of the original design felt like they were one possible approach out of many ... we wanted to explore other approaches and possibly find ones that would be enhancements. The end result gave us a house that was definitely more functional and gave the house the updates it needed for the 21st century." ®

SAVE

The Taylors made a few choices to save time and money in the renovation, like making purchases before demo began so items including tile and lighting would be on hand once the crew came in to begin work. Purchasing premade cabinetry with upgraded pulls provided a custom look without a custom price tag.

SPLURGE

The homeowners have four areas they felt were most important to splurge on in the renovation-the fireplace, the staircase, the soapstone counter and the windows. The home's original single-pane windows were drafty and on subzero mornings, the homeowners would awaken to find a layer of ice on the inside of several of their windows. Not just practical, the installation of new windows and sliding glass doors has had aesthetic benefits for the house too. The sliders on the main level help bring nature into the home, including plenty of natural light and views of the foxes, deer, squirrels, hawks and more that live in the surrounding woods.

SOMETHING UNIQUE

The home is accessed from the driveway via a bridge, which was a standout detail for the Taylors when they first toured the property. The bridge was rebuilt and widened during the renovation project.

The fireplace is the first thing visitors see when walking into the home, and it's the centerpiece of the upper level. The original paneling, a thin builder-grade plywood, was warped and showing its age, so it was replaced with solid walnut shiplap that now extends to the pony wall encasing the staircase.

(1) THE HOME BACKS UP TO A COUNTY PARK IN A QUIET SUBURBAN WASH-INGTON, D.C., NEIGHBOR-HOOD FEATURING OTHER MIDCENTURY HOMES. THE BRIDGE LEADING FROM THE DRIVEWAY TO THE HOME WAS A DRAW FOR THE HOMEOWNERS WHEN THEY WERE HOUSE HUNTING. IT WAS REBUILT AND WIDENED IN THE RENOVATION.

(2) THE CENTERPIECE FIRE-PLACE WAS ORIGINAL TO THE HOME BUT HADN'T AGED WELL. THE THIN PLYWOOD PANELING WAS WARPED AND IN NEED OF AN UPGRADE.

(3) "WE STRUGGLED FOR A WHILE ON WHETHER TO REPLACE THE ORIGINAL STAIR AS IT HAD SOME NOMINAL MIDCENTURY CHARACTER, " ARCHI-TECT LOU BALODEMAS SAYS. "ULTIMATELY WE AGREED IT WAS MORE OF AN OBSTRUCTION TO IMPROVING THE FEEL OF THE INTERIOR."

(4) WHEN THE HOME WAS PURCHASED, THE KITCHEN FEATURED THE ORIGINAL CABINETS, WHICH WERE SHOWING THEIR AGE. UPDATED APPLIANCES HAD BEEN INSTALLED BUT THE HOMEOWNERS FELT THEY WERE "NOTHING SPECIAL." PEEL-AND-STICK LINOLEUM REPLACED WHATEVER HAD BEEN INSTALLED ORIGINALLY.

IN THE EAST-END FOOTHILLS OF BOISE, IDAHO, you can find a Midcentury Modern lover's mecca: a whole neighborhood developed in the '50s and '60s full of midcentury homes. For Debbra Palmer and Gina Centioli, it was just the place to purchase their own piece of history in the form of a 1962 home.

"My father wanted to be an architect, and I fell in love with his architecture books and magazines as a child," Debbra says. "It was all Midcentury Modern style and the pictures reminded [me] of the Brady Bunch house and other sets on classic TV." Gina also loves the style and enjoys its minimalistic aspects. However, the home needed updates—particularly in the master bathroom and bedroom—so they hired Jessica Luque, principal designer and owner of Stussi Luque Design to reconfigure the space while still honoring its heritage.

FUNCTIONALITY

When Debbra and Gina first purchased the home, it appeared as though the master bedroom was originally two rooms that had been combined into one. This made it lengthy but without a lot of usable space, and there was no master bathroom. "The clients wanted a spacious master bedroom that would have lots of functional storage, while also allowing for a powder bath," Jessica says. "They wanted changes to feel true to the period in which the home was built and speak to their personal minimalist tastes."

Jessica came up with a plan to use some of the extra space in the master bedroom, along with a hallway bathroom, to create a new master bathroom while simultaneously giving the bedroom a much better flow (and to use some of the extra space for a new guest bathroom in the hallway). "This was by far the most exciting part of the project for me to work on. Everything was ripped down to the studs," Jessica says. She drew the layout and elevations, and selected all the finishes to create a stunning master bedroom and bathroom.

(TOP) A STUNNING WALL OF TILE GREETS THE EYE IN THE MASTER BATHROOM. "4" X 4" FIELD TILE WAS COMMONLY USED IN THE '50S AND '60S," JESSICA NOTES. "HOWEVER, THE COLOR AND PATTERN WE CHOSE MADE FOR A HIGHER END LOOK WHILE GIVING A NOD TO THE '60S VIBE." THE TILE AND RAISED PATTERN COME FROM THE SIGNAL TILE COLLECTION AT CLAYHAUS. A STAIRWELL AND DOORWAY COMBO ARE THE FIRST IMPRESSION OF THE HOME. THE FLOORING AND LIGHT FIXTURE WERE ORIGINAL TO THE SPACE, BUT THE RAILING HAD BEEN REPLACED WITH SOMETHING FROM THE '90S. HOMEOWNERS GINA CENTIOLI AND DEBBRA PALMER WANTED SOMETHING MORE DRAMATIC AS THEY WALKED IN THE FRONT DOOR. DESIGNER JESSICA LUQUE "SELECTED THE WALLPAPER AND HAD A CUSTOM STAIR RAIL BUILT LOCALLY, BOTH INSPIRED BY THE FLOWERY SHAPE OF THE LIGHT FIXTURE. I THINK WE SUCCESSFULLY CREATED AN ENTRY THAT TIPS YOU OFF TO THE FEEL OF THE REST OF THE HOUSE."

(BELOW) IN THE MASTER BEDROOM, A BALTIC STYLE WALLPAPER ON THE END WALL BRINGS IN A RETRO OCHRE COLOR AND A TEXTURED SURFACE THAT ALMOST FEELS LIKE LINEN OR JUTE. "IT ADDS A LOT OF WARMTH TO THIS SPACE AND FEELS LIKE SOME-THING THAT YOU WOULD HAVE SEEN IN '60S-ERA HOMES," JESSICA SAYS.

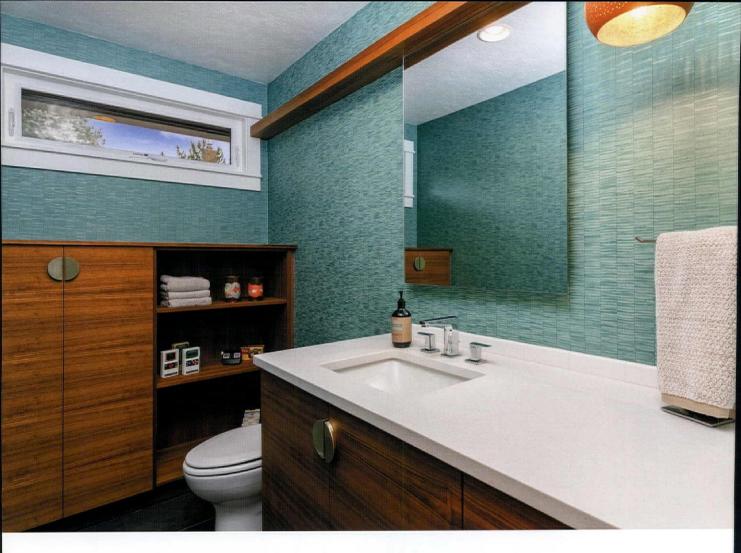

PROJECT AT A GLANCE

- Background: The house had been a neglected rental for several years and needed repairs as much as updates.
 Homeowner Debbra says, "Someone else may have torn the house down and started fresh, but we wanted to try to bring it back to life."
- Decorating: Since the residence has so much natural light (in addition to white walls), designer Jessica knew she could use lots of rich color without making any areas feel dark or heavy. "The color palette I chose has a retro vibe and includes yellow, vibrant blue, teal and orange," she says.
- Innovative Idea: The master bathroom counter design is a true work of ingenuity. It extends from the vanity into the shower and presented challenges that Jessica creatively overcame. "If the vanity ended right at the glass, there was a possibility the wood would be damaged by the glass sweating down the road," she says. She didn't want to let go of the look, so she left a gap between the vanity and glass that's large enough to allow for air flow and cleanability, but small enough to disappear visually as the counter passes over it.

(TOP) RECONFIGURING UNDERUTILIZED SPACE IN THE MASTER BEDROOM AND BATHROOM ALLOWED FOR A NEW GUEST BATHROOM IN THE HALLWAY, A TEAK VANITY BY MONKEHAUS AND A COLORFUL WALLPAPER CHOICE MIMIC THE TONE OF THE MASTER BATHROOM.

(OPPOSITE TOP) PART OF THE RENOVATION INCLUDED SPIFFING UP THE HOME'S CURB APPEAL. "THE HOMEOWNERS WANTED TO REALLY LEAN INTO THE MIDCENTURY MODERN STYLES SEEN THROUGHOUT THE NEIGHBORHOOD AND ADD ELEMENTS THAT WOULD HAVE BEEN ERA APPROPRIATE," SAYS INTERIOR DESIGNER JESSICA LUQUE. "I IMPLEMENTED CLEAR-STAINED CEDAR SIDING AND RAN IT VERTICAL ON THE FRONT EXTERIOR, DRAWING THE EYE UP CREATING A VISUALLY TALLER LOOK TO THE HOME, WITH MORE DEPTH AND TEXTURE."

COLORFUL UPDATES

Now a glorious full-tiled wall is the focal point of the new master bathroom and anchors the vanity and shower together. Other highlights include a counter that seamlessly moves from the vanity into the shower as a ledge, a teak vanity which was built by MonkeHaus, and half-moon-shaped drawer pulls that add just the right amount of sparkle. In a truly masterful design move, anywhere that you can see into the master bathroom from the bedroom, you are treated to the sight of wallpaper reflecting off the bathroom mirror. "The two spaces are really married in that way and complement each other," Jessica says. "The colors are pulled throughout both spaces in art and linen. I think the balance is playful and perfect between the two spaces."

With her keen eye for design and love of Midcentury Modern design, Jessica was able to create the modernist master suite retreat of Debbra and Gina's dreams. ®

(ABOVE) THE NEWLY DEFINED MASTER BEDROOM NEEDED FRESH STYLING. "I WORKED WITH THE CLIENT IN THE SELECTION OF BOTH NEW AND VINTAGE FURNITURE AND ART SELECTIONS," JESSICA SAYS. "I WANTED AS MANY VINTAGE PIECES AS POSSIBLE." THE BED, WITH BUILT-IN SIDE TABLES, AND THE ARTWORKS (ALL BUT ONE) ARE ALL VINTAGE FINDS, WHILE THE WALL-MOUNTED LIGHT FIXTURES ARE NEW BUT FEEL VERY MIDCENTURY MODERN.

Budget-Minded

RENOVATIONS CAN EASILY SKYROCKET IN PRICE, BUT DEBBRA AND GINA FOCUSED ON ACHIEVING THEIR DREAM HOME WITHIN THEIR BUDGET. HERE'S HOW THEY DID IT.

- Prioritize. "Within our budget, our priorities were to give the house a little curb appeal and to say goodbye to the 1990s DIY main bathroom," Debbra says.
- Stay flexible. Certain upgrades were necessary, including new egress windows and wells. To accommodate them, Debbra and Gina put off other projects for later, like breeze block walls and a patio.
- Allow some splurges. Maintaining the home's historic integrity was important, so the couple splurged in some areas, including cedar accent siding, a custom-built iron railing in the entryway and the bathroom tile. "The results were great!" Debbra says.
- Get creative. The entry to the home features natural stone, and Jessica wanted to echo it in the master bathroom floor. "The wall tile was a splurge, so the floor tile needed to be more cost effective," she says. "I ended up selecting a Home Depot stocked black slate tile that fit both the budget and the natural-element aspect."

A rare 1960s trailer goes from dilapidated to retro-luxury thanks to a midcentury-loving couple who turned their hobby of fixing up old trailers into a career.

104 atomic - panch com THE RENOVATION GUIDE . SUMMER 2020

ANNA AND JUSTIN SCRIBNER GOT THEIR DREAM job—by accident. During the recession of the early 2000s, the couple had to sell the midcentury trinkets and vehicles they had accumulated, like a 1964 Airstream they built themselves. Justin leaned on his contracting background and started renovating beat up trailers he found to earn a few bucks.

After fixing up and selling a few, the couple realized their hobby could become a career. They founded Flyte Camp and started restoring trailers from the '20s to the mid-1960s for a larger profit, even televising their restorations for a few years on a show called Flippin' RVs.

Anna says Flyte Camp now habitually works on pieces for historical museums and boutique hotels, and even crafts mobile salons and photo booths. "Someone is always throwing something new at us," she says. "About once a year we'll pick up a trailer people are scared to touch, and those are our passion projects." The Holiday House Geographic Model X was one of those undertakings. Flyte Camp poured $250,000 into trying to maintain the high-end, vintage body and interior while outfitting the trailer with modern amenities.

"This was one we got to do, sink or swim," Anna says. "It wasn't a small project, and it kind of kept growing, even for us."

HOLIDAY HOUSE HISTORY

The first Holiday House trailers popped up in the winter of 1959, when workers from Harry & David (the fruit company) began producing aluminum and wood travel trailers to make money during the yearly harvesting lull.

Harry & David President David Holmes then enlisted world-renowned industrial engineer Chuck Pelly, who designed the Scarab racecar and founded Designworks USA—BMW's California studio—to create a "trailer for the rich."

"Someone is always throwing something new at us," Anna says. "About once a year we'll pick up a trailer people are scared to touch, and those are our passion projects."

THE ORIGINAL TRAILER BOASTED A SHINY VINYL CEILING, REMINISCENT OF A '60S AIRPLANE, BUT ANNA FELT THAT PAIRING VINYL WITH WOOD WOULD CHEAPEN THE INTERIOR. THE NEW ALU-MINUM PANEL AND LIGHTS PARALLEL THE POLISHED, MODERN LOOK OF THE COUNTERTOPS AND BATHROOM.

(TOP) THIS OLIVE, 30-INCH-DEEP SECTIONAL PROVIDES A PLUSH SLEEPING PLACE FOR TWO PEOPLE. THE RICH HUE OF THE CUSHIONS TIES IN WITH THE GLISTENING PAINT STRIPE ON THE EXTERIOR.

(RIGHT) ANNA BOUNCED IDEAS FOR THE RENOVATION OFF CHUCK PELLY, THE ORIGINAL DESIGNER OF THE HOLIDAY HOUSE, TO ENSURE THE REMODEL STAYED TRUE TO THE INTENDED DESIGN. PELLY APPRECIATED FLYTE CAMP'S WORK SO MUCH THAT HE SIGNED THE TRAILER TWICE—ONCE INSIDE AND ONCE OUTSIDE.

(BOTTOM, RIGHT) THE SHOWER, SINKS AND KITCHEN COUNTERTOPS ARE ALL SLEEK STAINLESS STEEL, A COOL CONTRAST TO THE GLOSSY WARM WALNUT COVERING MOST OF THE INTERIOR.

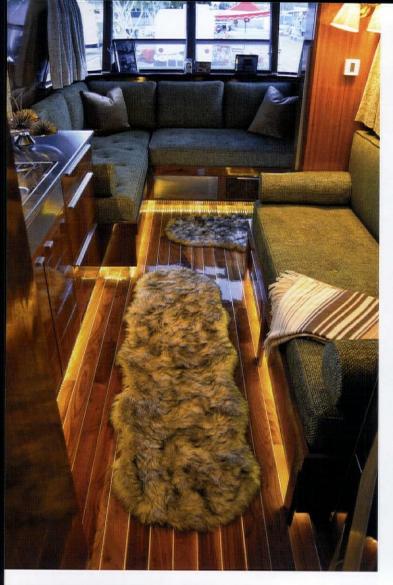

Under Chuck Pelly's direction, the company manufactured futuristic-looking fiberglass trailer prototypes for the Holiday House Geographic Model X. "It was built following an airplane-type style and technique with aluminum plates and plaster, a unique system to get these curves," explains Chuck. Unfortunately, the molds mostly ended up burning in a factory fire.

TACKLING THE INTERIOR

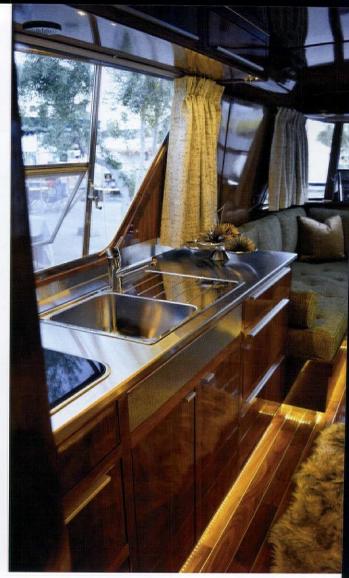

When the Scribners got their hands on their own Holiday House trailer, it was rundown and lacked original interior components. Anna says the interior felt dark after she replaced the trailer's vinyl ceiling with smooth wood paneling, so she ran lights down an aluminum panel through the ceiling center for practical and modern, but tasteful, illumination.

(TOP, LEFT) HAVE YOU EVER SEEN A TRAILER INTERIOR INFUSED WITH SUCH OPULENCE? THE RITZY FUR RUGS DRAW YOUR GAZE TO THE SILKY WOOD FLOORING, AND THE TUFT-ED L-SHAPED SECTIONAL IS WAITING FOR SOMEONE TO SINK INTO IT ON A DROWSY AFTERNOON.

(LEFT) DETAILED TOUCHES LIKE THE TRAILER'S ORIGINAL SCONCES AND THE ERA-APPROPRIATE RADIO MAKE THE TRAILER LOOK LIKE IT WAS PLUCKED STRAIGHT FROM THE '60S. YOU CAN ALMOST HEAR THE CROONING OF RAY CHARLES AND DEAN MARTIN.

Flyte Camp swapped the trailer's original laminate countertops for a more high-end stainless steel—a popular material in the '60s. Anna opted for handmade walnut flooring with an aluminum inlay, rather than era-esque Marmoleum or tile covering, for a more upscale look. "We tried to design it in a way that just accentuated all the windows and cool things about it," she says.

Original designer Chuck Pelly says Anna nailed the historic aspects of the Model X. "She did a beautiful job updating things and making it contemporary," says Chuck. "It was an incredible joy to see." ^(B)

BIG SPENDER

When it came to renovating the Model X, the Scribners didn't spare any expense. They poured money into coating the 24-foot-long trailer with showroom-ready paint, and installed marine-quality drawer refrigerators for durable food storage. The pair replaced the interior teak finishing with a more polished black walnut. Investing extra funds allowed the Scribners to produce the trailer they thought Holiday House designers had envisioned for the Model X.

OFF THE GRID

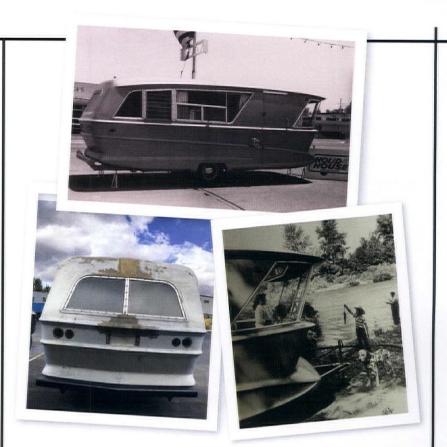

While the trailer is perfect for a quick weekend getaway, it's also built to sustain itself parked alongside a river for a week at a time. Flyte Camp equipped the Model X with portable solar panels and large holding tanks to provide the energy and water necessary for longer trips. The Scribners also installed LED lighting, which have a lower draw than incandescent bulbs.

KEEPING THINGS GROOVY

One of the shower walls was originally manufactured from fiberglass and covered in an iconic midcentury circular design that let in light from the rest of the trailer. But the wall panel was not in usable condition. Instead of trying to recreate the exact panel, the Scribners built the shower out of stainless steel and made a door to the bathroom that paid homage to the original design. To create the door, they replaced the panels on a spare 1960s cabinet with fiberglass sheets— light still streams into the bathroom but in a more upscale fashion.

A SPARKLING FINISH

The Scribners believe this particular trailer had only been used as a mold for other Model Xs, as it lacked plumbing lines and had never been painted. The pair landed on a beautiful, muted Olive Green paint they replicated in the upholstery and interior finishes to complement the walnut floors and cabinetry.

Innovative idea: The centerpiece of the room is the vinyl composition tile floor, intentionally designed to look like a floor rug that brings the entire space together.

Before the renovation: Previously, the kitchen was home to knotty pine cabinets that were dated, in need of upkeep and made the room feel darker. Additionally, there was no place for Margie to display her beloved colorful pottery pieces.

When it came time for this Santa Barbara kitchen to get a facelift, homeowner and renowned landscape architect Margie Grace and her partner Dawn Close, founders and owners of Grace Design Associates, knew just what they wanted to do. "It was time to brighten up and lighten up," Margie says.

As she looked for inspiration, Margie thought back to the post-war era when the home was constructed. "In every design, for me there's a story," she says. "I wanted to have a newness that felt like when people were trying to put the war behind them." The end result is what Margie calls a "happy post-war kitchen." White cabinets, soft yellow walls and a colorful vinyl composition tile floor that Margie worked on installing herself effortlessly transport guests back to 1948 when the home was built.

THIS "PENINSULA" WAS ADDED DURING THE RENOVATION. MARGIE LOWERED THE COUNTERTOP AND EXTENDED IT TO CREATE A COZY BREAKFAST AREA THAT WORKS WELL IN THE LIMITED SPACE. (OPPOSITE) THE SHOWSTOPPER OF THIS KITCHEN IS THE FLOOR. WITH A BOLD AND COLORFUL PATTERN, IT'S DESIGNED TO LOOK LIKE A FLOOR RUG.

How to Get This Midcentury Look

- BRIGHT AND NEW. After the shortage of materials during World War II, families wanted appliances and finishes that were bright, shiny and new. To achieve this look, use clean lines, metallics and reproduction or vintage period light fixtures.
- METAL COUNTERTOP EDGING. A sign of the times were Formica laminate countertops with metal edging. It may seem like a small detail, but they make a huge impact.
- RETRO APPLIANCES. These are big statement pieces that recall the American kitchens of midcentury days gone by. In this kitchen, Margie and Dawn went with a Big Chill refrigerator and a vintage Wedgewood stove.
- POPS OF COLOR. Adding solid colors throughout a space is the simplest way to get that midcentury look. Warm yellows and turquoise blues are a great place to start.

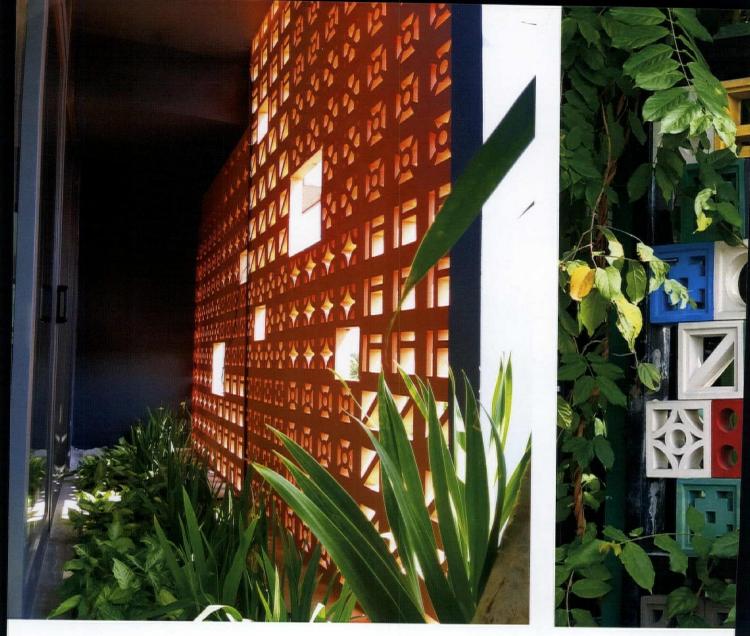

CONNECTION AND COLOR

When Margie and Dawn purchased the home in 1989, they did an initial kitchen renovation. Leftovers from that project were pine cabinets and some teal tiles. "I kept the cabinet boxes and got new cabinet doors," Margie says of the most recent renovation. She painted the cabinets white and added shelving both to create a sense of connection and to display her colorful pottery collection. "We wanted everything to feel all blended together," she says. Leftover tile from the 1989 backsplash now adds a splash of color behind the sink.

BEFOR

While the layout remained largely the same, Margie did want to incorporate a breakfast space. "I decided on what I call the peninsula," she says of the lowered and extended countertop and seating area. The rounded shape and single metal leg are complemented perfectly by two vintage garage-sale chairs.

The retro stove came from the original 1989 renovation, while the Big Chill fridge was a new addition. Laminate Formica countertops and metal edging are another perfect midcentury touch. Margie even hunted down a microwave with a retro aesthetic and put a metal breadbox on the peninsula as a hiding place for notorious kitchen clutter like keys and phone chargers. Intentionality of design and delightful details like that breadbox make this a kitchen you can't help but love. @

Life's a Breeze

Learn about these versatile concrete breeze blocks, the role they play in midcentury design and how to incorporate them into your OWN home's exterior. By RYAN MORRIS

Photography Courtesy of VILLA LAGOON TILE

IF YOU LOVE MIDCENTURY DESIGN, you probably have a soft spot for breeze block (also called screen block)simple concrete blocks with decorative holes that can be stacked into walls that deflect rain, allow for ventilation and provide both privacy as well as outside visibility. The blocks themselves have been around since the midcentury, but their basic concept goes back further still.

"In Israel and Morocco, carved wood screens have served a similar purpose for hundreds of years," says Lundy Wilder, the founder of Villa Lagoon Tile, a company that manufactures breeze blocks and cement tiles.

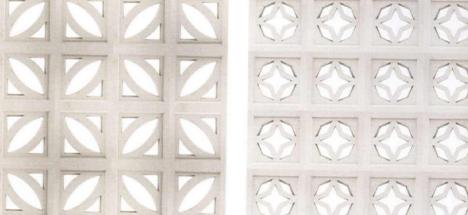

In the U.S., the first real burst of enthusiasm came when an architect named Edward Durell Stone designed the American Embassy in New Delhi, India, in 1954. Designers took notice of the perforated concrete blocks used by Stone and realized they fit perfectly with the climate and style of California.

Throughout the 1950s and '60s, breeze block was widely

Breeze blocks can be stacked into walls that deflect rain, allow for ventilation and provide both privacy as well as outside visibility.

used in homes and apartment buildings in the U.S., especially in warmer climates for protection against the sun. For Midcentury Modern architecture, breeze block also served as extra privacy for expansive glass walls and doors.

RENEWED INTEREST

Breeze block fell out of fashion in the 1970s, but with the recent surge in appreciation for midcentury architecture and furniture, public interest has renewed. Modern commercial buildings and residences throughout the U.S. have embraced screen block in new designs. Perhaps most notable is in Palm Springs, CA, where the famous Parker hotel's 2003 redesign included a large (and now iconic) breeze block wall. In addition to the classic use in exteriors, screen block is now being used as an innovative accent or partition wall for the interior—as seen in New York's Boro hotel (2015), where decorative screen block is the backdrop for the lobby cafe.

"Starting about 2016, I noticed the use of breeze block in new creative architecture, in Vietnam particularly," says Lundy. In 2019, Villa Lagoon began offering breeze block which became a smash hit for the company—though it wasn't their first product.

Villa Lagoon itself began in 2007, when Lundy had an idea to use cement tile for a house she was designing.

Lundy was trying to make the home as hurricane-proof as possible, taking inspiration from homes she'd seen on a trip to Guatemala. The next year, after installing 11 custom cement-tile designs within the home, she took a few pictures, started a website and took a shot at selling them. She started her new business just as cement tile was taking off in popularity. In her own words, Lundy began her company "in a closet," but over time it's grown to be the success it is now.

FROM THE EXPERT

Lundy has a few words of advice for those hoping to use breeze block in their own designs. "First of all, the breeze blocks we make now are not traditional," she says. The breeze block of old was not load bearing, while these blocks are. They're made in Vietnam from local sand; the blocks are pure white and, thanks to the sand quality, easily made in tinted colors. They are much denser, stronger and smoother than traditional breeze blocks.

As far as design goes, Villa Lagoon's breeze block is perfect for facades because it creates privacy, ventilation and protection from the sun. And it's so strong, it can also act as a load-bearing wall. As for choosing colors or designs, the ease with which the blocks can be tinted means they can be made in just about any color and fit just about any design.

A Breath By AUTUMN KRAUSE Photography by CJ SOUTH Styling by ELIN WALTERS

A designer breathes new life into the exterior of her own Midcentury Modern home that long ago lost its historical identity.

(TOP) WEIGHING HER LOVE OF MIDCENTURY MODERN AGAINST HER APPRECIATION FOR A CONTEMPORARY LOOK, ELIN WALTERS DECIDED TO PAINT THE BRICK ON THE EXTERIOR. "WE DEBATED IT, BUT IN THE END DECIDED THAT WE SIMPLY LIKED IT BETTER PAINTED," ELIN SAYS. "I KNOW THAT MIDCENTURY MODERN PURISTS WOULD CHALLENGE US ON THAT ONE AND AS A DESIGNER ADVISING OTHERS, I ENCOURAGE THINKING HARD ABOUT ALTERING ORIGINAL ELEMENTS IN A HOUSE."

(ABOVE) THIS OUTDOOR SPACE IS AN ENGAGING VISUAL. TO ADD LEVITY TO THE CONCRETE WALLS AND NEWLY-BUILT WOOD DECK, ELIN PLACED BRIGHTLY-COLORED FURNISHINGS THROUGHOUT THE SPACE. MEANWHILE, TWO CREATIVE LIGHTING OPTIONS SET THE AMBIANCE EVEN FURTHER. SOLAR-POWERED MINI CHINESE LANTERNS ARE DRAPED OVER THE POLES AND RECESSED LIGHTING IS SET IN THE OVERHANG. "THE RECESSED LIGHTING IS ON DIMMERS SO WE CAN CREATE THE MOOD IN THE EVENINGS," ELIN SAYS.

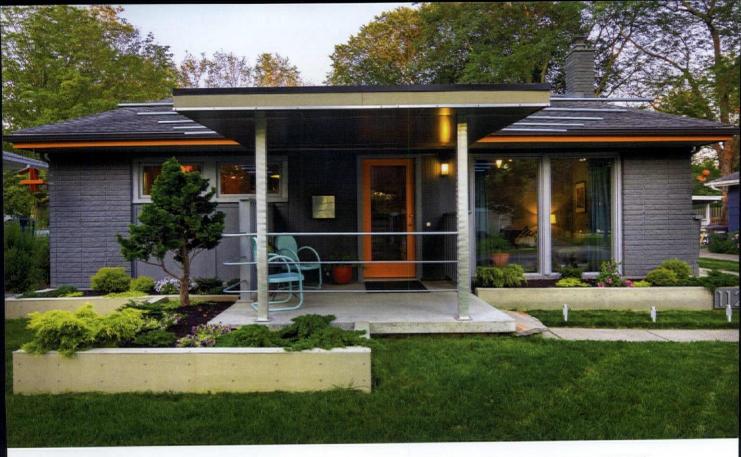

AFTER FIRST SEEING THE MIDCENTURY MODERN HOME her family would purchase, the thoughts of owner and interior designer at Exactly Designs, Elin Walters, were: "Oh boy, this needs a lot of work but we can do it!" The residence, located in Ann Arbor, Michigan, had a color scheme that she describes as "atrocious" (burgundy, green and blue), dispiriting landscaping, an eyesore chain link fence around the backyard and a clunky porch.

Perhaps most tragically, the home had lost its historical identity. "It strayed from its roots," Elin says, "and didn't have any visual appeal or interest ... or fun." She came up with an artful design that included redoing the porch and landscaping, adding an addition and constructing a deck and outdoor living space. The home now blends architecturally with the rest of the Midcentury Modern neighborhood, but has an intriguing color scheme and landscaping details that make it truly stand apart.

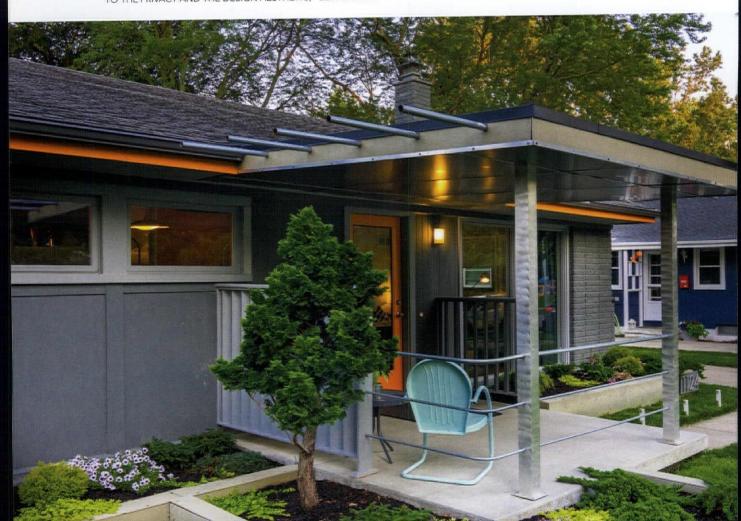

CURB APPEAL

Seeking a color palette that would create contrast and sophistication, Elin and her husband settled on gray for the exterior of the home—along with a surprising accent of orange, which she used for the door and a fun stripe above the gutters. "Orange is our favorite color, and although we didn't want to overdo it, we thought a few pops would add some energy," she says. They demolished the existing wood porch and rebuilt it with concrete and metal, while also removing the disorganized landscaping and replacing it with built-in cement board planters.

One of the more distinctive elements of the home's new exterior are ten extruded metal tubes (five projecting on each side of the porch roof) that extend the porch's reach and mimic a similar extension out back. Elin found particular satisfaction in restoring the large picture windows in the front of the house. "Restoring the windows and the glass front door brings our home back to its original form," she says. "It's the true midcentury fashion aesthetic to take the outdoors in."

TWO SHINY ALUMINUM POSTS ARE JOINED BY EXTRUDED METAL TUBING AS A RAILING ON THE NEW PORCH. THE CEILING PANELS, A SANDWICH OF TWO LAYERS OF ALUMINUM OVER PVC, VIRTUALLY DISAPPEAR ABOVE THE POURED CONCRETE FLOOR. "THE ORIGINAL PORCH ALSO HAD TWO PARTIAL LOUVERED WALLS; WE INCLUDED UPDATED VERSIONS OF THOSE, ADDING BOTH TO THE PRIVACY AND THE DESIGN AESTHETIC," ELIN SHARES.

(RIGHT) TWO BERTOIA DIAMOND CHAIRS GIVEN TO THE FAMILY BY ELIN'S STEPSISTER ADD A LIGHTHEARTED, CHEERY NOTE TO THE DECK. "SHE HAD THEM IN HER GARAGE AND WASN'T GOING TO USE THEM," ELIN SAYS. "IRONICALLY, THEY WERE ALREADY TURQUOISE, WHICH MATCHES THE IKEA TABLE WE HAVE OUT THERE AS WELL."

(BOTTOM RIGHT) THE SIDE OF THE HOUSE HAS A LINE OF BOXWOOD, WHICH SOFTENS THE BRICK AND ADDS THE FRESHNESS OF GREEN. IT'S ALSO WONDERFULLY LOW MAINTENANCE. "I WISH I COULD SAY THAT I ENJOY GARDEN-ING, BUT I REALLY DON'T!" ELIN SAYS. "ASIDE FROM PULLING A FEW WEEDS AND PLANTING A FEW COLORFUL ANNUALS IN THE SPRING AND SUMMER, THE LANDSCAPING IS VIRTUALLY MAINTENANCE-FREE, JUST THE WAY I LIKE IT."

DECK LIFE

When the family first purchased the home, the space between the garage and the house was a concrete pad and the rest of the yard was enclosed with an ugly chainlink fence. "In order to improve the home's usability, we added an addition and a deck," Elin says. "The deck connects the garage and our house and creates an outdoor living space." Elin's husband built the deck and used treated lumber that has since been stained a beautiful cedar color. Hanging planters, the brainchild of Elin's stepfather, break up the concrete wall and soften the look. "We knew we wanted plants and green and toyed with a live wall," Elin says. "This was the solution." The planters have metal sleeves fabricated to slip over standard plastic hanging planters and, since the family decided to leave the metal unsealed, they've weathered over time, creating a beautiful rusty patina.

(TOP LEFT) A VARIETY OF LOW, ALL-SEASON EVERGREENS WERE CHOSEN FOR THE PLANTERS. "IT GIVES US GREEN NO MATTER THE SEASON, AND IN THE SPRING AND SUMMER WE ADD COLORFUL FLOWERS," ELIN SAYS. A LITTLE TREE WAS SELECTED BECAUSE IT REMINDS ELIN OF A BONSAI (ALBEIT A GIANT ONE). SHE SAYS, "FOR THE PLANTS, WE TRIED TO BRING IN A VARIETY OF HEIGHTS FOR VISUAL INTEREST, BUT NOT TOO MANY HIGH ONES BECAUSE WE DIDN'T WANT TO COVER UP THE FRONT OF THE HOUSE." (TOP RIGHT) ELIN LEFT THE DIY HANGING PLANTER BOXES UNSEALED SO THEY WOULD AGE OVER TIME. AS SHE WATERS THE PLANTS IN THE SUMMER, SHE APPRECIATES THE ARTISTRY AND VARIANCE OF THE NATURAL RUSTING PROCESS. "EACH DAY IS A NEW ARTWORK!" SHE SAYS. SHE PLANTS THE BOXES EACH SEASON. IN THE SUMMER, SHE HAS VARIOUS CASCADING AND SPIKY PLANTS. IN THE WINTER, SHE FILLS THEM WITH EVERGREENS.

(BOTTOM) IN KEEPING WITH A MODERN THEME, THE PORCH ROOF CANTILEVERS OVER A CONCRETE POURED PATIO. THE FASCIA OF THE PORCH IS CLAD IN THE SAME JAMES HARDIE PANEL THAT COVERS THE FASCIA AND EXTERIOR WALLS OF THE ADDITION ON THE BACK OF THE HOUSE, MAKING THE DESIGN CONSISTENT THROUGHOUT THE RESIDENCE.

Two turquoise Bertoia Diamond chairs give a delightful pop of color and are perfect for enjoying a fire in the fireplace that Elin found on Houzz. "It was fully rusted with a gorgeous, simple form," Elin says. "The fireplace gave me the idea to let the hanging planters rust as well." The space has created a haven that the Walters find themselves retreating to in the spring, summer and fall evenings, both as a family and with guests.

Now the residence's exterior has a completely new identity, one that intersects its past heritage with a bold and modern interpretation. "People often tell us upon arriving for the first time at our house that 'of course I knew which one was yours as I pulled up'," Elin shares. "I love that."
