"We spec Harditex on every project."

"Harditex works great, especially its immunity to water damage. When a soft system gets a leak, the water gets into the substrate and the plywood goes to pieces. You not only lose your finish, you also lose the structural integrity. There's no problem when Harditex gets wet."

"We've also had many problems with woodpeckers chipping holes in the soft systems, but they can't hurt Harditex."

"Durability and longevity are Harditex's most important selling points. The longest soft system guarantee is just 5 years."

Durable Harditex® baseboard won't burn and is immune to the damaging effects of moisture and termites. Harditex provides a smooth, durable substrate ideally suited for use with direct applied elastomeric finish systems (D.E.F.S.) and exterior insulation and finish systems (E.I.F.S.) in residential and light commercial construction.

Dimensionally stable Harditex installs fast and easy and can be cut with score and snap techniques. It can be used as a shear wall panel and in external ceiling applications.

Backed by a transferable, 50-year limited warranty, lightweight, Harditex baseboards save you time and money. No vapor barriers are needed, unless required by local building codes, which allows interior work to begin as soon as the board is up and the seams are sealed.

There are those of us who march to the beat of a different drummer. And there are those within this group who insist they set the pace. These individuals are finding their way to Weather Shield wood windows and doors. Some are intrigued with the industry's widest variety of shapes, sizes and styles. Others are impressed with the true attention to detail on every sash lock, every contour, every piece of trim. But whatever the reason, the number of people who seek the personal satisfaction of Weather Shield are not disappointed. They share the belief that a window is not merely a hole in a wall filled with glass. So to them, the possibilities of True Oak™ or Cherrywood™ interiors and bright brass hardware are more than just appealing. They're demanded. If you have ever felt stifled from the lack of expression most window manufacturers press on you, we invite you to become part of this group. But we caution you. The world will never look the same again. For the name of the Weather Shield dealer near you, call 1-800-477-6808 between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m., C.S.T.

Imagine what the world would be like without Architects...

Good design requires careful planning... The same is true when it comes to successfully automating your design firm. To start, you need a strong foundation. With it's power and ease of use, Apple's technology is a natural for today's progressive architects.

"The fact is, Apple Computer shipped more computers into the architectural market in North America during 1991 than any other personal computer, workstation or mainframe vendor in the world." • ARCHITECTURAL RECORD • Apple Macintosh and Architects, June 1992

However, like well-conceived architecture, there's more to system design than just engineering a foundation. In the world of computer technology, it takes talented individuals experienced in the art and science of Office Automation Planning.

For example, in Florida you can call Mac Design Solutions, a member of the Apple Consultant Relations program. Their skilled architects and designers provide functional planning and construction of computer systems for fellow design professionals. Mac Design Solutions calls this innovative approach, COMPUTECTURE ™

Why not see what a good system architect with Apple computers can do for your world?

EDITORIAL

On the road again this summer...seeing some old places I haven't seen in awhile, returning to some of my favorite spots and visiting some places I've only read about. In the latter category, I was happily surprised by some of the places I saw for the first time and it reinforced my basic belief that you can't fully appreciate a work of architecture by reading about it and studying pictures...even good ones.

I began my travels in June by returning to Virginia, the place of my birth and the land that remains closest to my heart. I went once again to Charlottesville, as I've done so often in the past few years and was reassured once more of Mr. Jefferson's genius. There is so much to be learned from the "Academical Village" about siting, proportion, scale and simplicity of detail. Just a few minutes away is Monticello, a small house, really, on a windy summit. The grounds smell of boxwood and herbs and you can hear bees buzzing everywhere and there's always a breeze. The home is being restored, specifically the roof, and while I was sorry that the house was covered with scaffolding, seeing its underpinnings made it seem less a monument and more someone's home.

Asheville, North Carolina brought me face to face with Mr. Vanderbilt's folly, "Biltmore House" and the work of Richard Morris Hunt. There is no way to describe Biltmore. You simply have to experience it. The site defies description and you can see for yourself. They just filmed "The Last of the Mohicans" on the grounds. The house is a transplanted French chateau, a sort of Blois/Chambord/Chenonceaux combo. But that is such a superficial comment to make about so fine a residence that it pains me to allude to it. Biltmore is a work of art...a meeting of the minds, and perhaps the souls, of two men of artistic genius, Richard Morris Hunt and landscape architect Frederick Law Olmstead. If, as Mies said, "God is in the details", then there is plenty that is Godlike about Biltmore House where there is a feast for the eye at every turn.

I finally made it to Cape May, which I guess is New Jersey's answer to Seaside. Except, of course, that on Cape May the houses really are vintage Victorian situated on narrow streets and alleys where gingerbread porches nearly touch. Cape May has what no one can build into a community. It has nostalgia.

A weekend in Philadelphia gave me time to renew my acquaintance with the City Hall, Independence Hall and of course, the PSFS Building which still looks pretty darn good.

I came home thinking, and wondering about, why some buildings are so timeless, why I never get tired of looking at them and talking and writing about them. In part, it's because they tell a story about the time or the men who created them. Monticello and Biltmore House surely do that most eloquently. Sometimes it's because they are simply timeless in terms of the values they address. The "lawn" at the University of Virginia possesses those values that are most important, including impeccable scale and siting and vision on the part of the architect. Other times, at a more basic level, lasting appeal just stems from the fact that a building is interesting or fun to look at. The Philly City Hall is like that. It's a feast for the eye that's almost too much to comprehend. Bottom line, of course, is that all of these building evoke a response and that, I believe, is the name of the game. Worst of all is a building that doesn't cause a head to turn or an eye to blink. DG

Economic Recovery Under Way in Architecture and Building Industry

Architecture practices and the building industry in many regions of the country appear to be showing early signs of economic recovery, according to a national poll of architecture firm principals conducted by The American Institute of Architects (AIA).

This survey is one of the earliest indicators of what appears to be an economic recovery in the profession of architecture and the building industry. Most measurements of building trends are based on construction contracts, awards and permits, which generally occur months after the design has begun.

More than half (52 percent) of the survey participants believed the economic recession as it pertains to architecture firms in their areas has bottomed out, while only 20 percent of the respondents said the recession had not bottomed out and 28 percent were not sure.

In addition, fully 44 percent of the participants reported that business opportunities for architecture firms in their areas have increased since the beginning of the year. Nearly one-third (31 percent) said the level of opportunities stayed the same, and 25 percent stated that the number of opportunities had decreased.

Given the fact that two-thirds of the participants said firms in their area suffered a great deal during the recession, it is encouraging that more than half believe it has bottomed out and nearly half said business opportunities have increased since the beginning of the year.

Nationally, hiring and layoff trends seem to have balanced out. Half (61 percent) said the number of architects employed by their firms had stayed the same since the beginning of the year. One-quarter (24 percent) said the number of architects employed by their firms increased, and 25 percent said that the number of architects decreased. Larger firms were more likely to hire or lay off architects; smaller firms were more likely to employ a consistent number.

When asked which building types have experienced increases recently, the answers given most often were health-care and education facilities, single-family residential, renovation, and government. Areas of great increase during the 1980s, such as commercial, office, and hotel, were mentioned less often.

Some regions faring better than others

New England, which was one of the first hit and worst affected areas, appears to be showing some positive results. More than half (53 percent) of the firm principals surveyed in the region said business opportunities in their area had increased since the beginning of 1992. Additionally, 43 percent of the respondents believed that the economic recession had bottomed out, while 38 percent were not sure and only 19 percent believed the downward spiral continues.

The other areas experiencing the greatest upswings, according to survey participants, were the West South Central region, the East South Central and the East North Central, West South Central and South Atlantic, the area which includes Florida.

The regions with the largest percentages of firms with increased employment of architects were the East North Central, the Mountain region and New England.

Conversely, only 13 percent of the respondents in the Pacific region, one of the last areas hit by the recession, reported increases in the number of architects employed. Additionally, 41 percent of the respondents from the region said that business opportunities in their area had declined since the beginning of the year. Only 27 percent reported increases, while 31 percent said the amount of opportunities had stayed the same.

The survey sampled 300 randomly selected firm principals from 48 states.

Letters

Dear Editor:

Regarding the recent issue of Florida Architect, I'm so glad you wrote that editorial ...(at least I think I am...) I was horrified to find a "Ladies Day Issue!" Now, next month we must have a "Men's Day" ... and so on. What can be gained from all this? I do agree with your final statement, however.

That's the only way anyone, male or female, African-American, Hispanic, white or Asian (Ps. you left out Native American ... see what I mean!) young or old, ever succeeds at anything. "By doing it well. Truly, sure for success."

In a more serious tone, I firmly believe we must attempt to unify efforts and create a new system ... one without hierarchy, one of true equality. I refer to such a system of "gylanic" as defined by Riane Eisler in her brilliant work, The Chalice & The Blade. She states, "To describe the real alternative to a system based on the ranking of half of humanity over the other, I propose the new term, gylany. Gy derives from the Greek word gymne or 'woman'. An derives from andros, or 'man.' The letter I between the two had a double meaning. In English, it stands for linking the two halves of humanity, rather than, as in androcracy, their ranking. In Greek, it derives from the verb lytein or lyeo, which in turn has a double meaning: to solve or resolve."

As you might guess, the above is lifted from a paper I am currently preparing. The megalithic temples of Malta, the earliest stone structures in the world, were products of the "gylanic" Great Goddess Culture and its "invigorating, earth-centered, life reverencing worldview" (Gimbutas, Language of the Goddess, 1989). I do believe we need to find a way to solve our problem; a "gylanic" system might work. A "Ladies Day" issue won't help us resolve the problem; it just creates another division. We need to work on the "linking."

This house is located within a fully developed suburban area and was originally built in the early 1960's. The current owners purchased the house because of the view of Sarasota Bay and with the idea of an extensive remodeling and enlargement. The owners demanded, however, that the new construction remain sympathetic in scale with the suburban context while maximizing exposure to the waterfront.

In addition to responding to physical site characteristics, the design for the addition resulted from the architect's desire to introduce formal and spatial clarity. All interior partitions, finishes and detailing are new. With the exception of the basic roof form, the exterior is new, as are all the openings. Only about thirty percent of the original structure remains.

JURY: "This house immediately impressed us in the way it takes advantage of a wonderful site. The skylit entrance and lap pool are particularly well-handled."
This building provides 232,500 square feet of office space to the Ft. Myers area. Its exterior sheathing is light-colored brick veneer with coral rock used for the base and window sills. The building is composed of two 3-story wings connected by an octagonal rotunda which is the primary public entrance to the complex. The rotunda conveys the image of a government building and stands as a major architectural event on
The wings completely fill the block and define the urban street front. A semi-public inner courtyard incorporates many existing trees.

Since one of the project goals was to respond to South Florida’s climate, broad overhangs and covered walkways were designed to shield the building and its users from the sun and torrential rain.

The building systems include a thermal ice storage system which allows electrical off-peak-demand generation of chilled water for cooling - a system which significantly reduces operating costs.

JURY: “This is a very simple solution to a complex program. We particularly like the handling of the central element and the stair towers, which give the building a very light feeling.”

Architect Antonin Nechodom, who died in 1928, designed many fine residences in Puerto Rico and the Dominican Republic. He left a legacy of homes in the Prairie School style and all but a few have been demolished because of urban development. Of his best work, only the Casa Roig remains as a tribute to his extraordinary talent.

The house was built in 1919 with Frank Lloyd Wright's Westcott Residence as inspiration for the concept. The final design, however, has an added richness owing to the use of decorative material and adaptations to the tropical context.

Restoration was faithful to the original plans with changes made only where the adaptive reuse as a museum required re-location of interior partitions. The Prairie style adapted easily to the tropics. The deep overhangs, extensive strip windows, open interior plans, terraces and porches were natural to the climate. To all of this, Nechodom contributed his personal touch with the addition of stained glass windows, glass mosaic inlays on the exterior surfaces and a collection of furniture in the "Arts and Crafts" style. Today this house stands as a model for the integration of architecture and the allied arts and the Caribbean is richer for its preservation.

JURY: "This house is extremely rich in its detail. The combination of a building that is basically a good Prairie Style house with this richness of decoration is very exciting and the restoration seems a particularly sensitive one."
Photos by John Betancourt and Max Toro
The design process consisted of a lyrical formulation of Puerto Rico's history through the placement of three basic contrasting volumes on a tropically articulated site plan.

The triangular volume, clad in a rough-textured sandy stone, houses the permanent exhibits and the support facilities and represents the island's withdrawn colonial past as a fortified insularist enclave.

The elongated pergola, clad in smooth white marble, represents Puerto Rico's social and economic awakening and its recognition of the need for interaction with the modern world. It acts as a connector between the triangular volume representing the past and the cylindrical element representing the future. The cylindrical volume, clad in copper and etched glass, houses the access ramps that culminate, at the second level, in the cinema. It represents Puerto Rico's present as a highly developed society and its future as a link between the hemispheres. The entire composition is poised on a "beach" ringed with palm trees contextualizing it to its tropical origins.

JURY: "The juxtaposition of geometries is intriguing and it creates some interesting interior spaces. The building looks as if it will function very well as gallery space."

This project was conceived as a compound with the tropical climate of South Florida and the client’s desire for an “alfresco” lifestyle setting the specifics. The house is diagonally sited to take advantage of the prevailing breezes and minimize heat gain. The existing grove of trees to the west blocks the westerly sun in the afternoon helping to keep the house cool during the hottest part of the day.

This house was planned as a multi-phase construction project where client/owner/builder were one in the same. A gatehouse which architect Daniel Williams also designed was the first phase of the project and it was the recipient of an FA/AIA Unbuilt Design Award. The main house and pool were the last phase to be completed.

The house is constructed of masonry block and reinforced concrete. The hammered texture concrete is a repeating theme unifying the first and second phases of the project.

JURY: “This seems to us an interesting way to use both concrete and color. The house is well-integrated into the site and the graphics in the presentation are excellent.”

Free Service Available To Architects

The Construction Connection is a free service to architects which will find any construction materials for commercial or industrial jobs that the architect has neither the time nor resources to locate. The company will provide a list of up to three manufacturers that will meet specifications for the desired material and the manufacturer will contact the architect.

The Construction Connection will give the architect's name to only three manufacturers for each material requested. This should prevent an individual being flooded with unnecessary calls...and there is no cost to the architect.

Construction Connection has over 9,000 manufacturers in their database and they will locate one material or everything needed for your next job. Call (305) 653-701 or 1-800-723-6863 outside the 305 area code.

Digital Plan Measure Adds More Scales

Calculated Industries has added a powerful new upgrade to their Scale Master multi-scale digital plan measure. It is called Scale Master Plus and it has 49 built-in scales plus an improved Custom Scale feature that offers seven more scales than the original model. The system includes 12 architectural scales, 11 engineering scales, 14 map-engineering scales and 12 metric scales.

The Metric mode should be especially helpful to construction estimators who must comply with the U.S. government's conversion to the metric scale for all federal procurements, grants and business-related activities by September 30, 1992. The Scale Master Plus simplifies this "metrification" by instantly converting between metric and architectural or engineering scales with the touch of a button.

The Scale Master Plus is ergonomically designed and balanced for left or right hand use. It adds distances positively in either direction, in any scale. And, it only subtracts distances when the "subtract" key is depressed, so users never have to worry about accidentally unrolling measurements.

For more information about Scale Master Plus, call (714) 921-1800 or dial toll free 1-800-854-8075.

In this series, laminated glass allows more than 70 percent of the visible light to enter a building while reflecting more than 50 percent of the heat-producing infrared energy from the sun. This performance allows high quality, energy-efficient window design with maximum light transmission and minimum solar heat gain.

Unlike competitive glass, California Series separates the glass' appearance from its performance. Whether neutral or tinted, California Series will reduce the solar load by approximately 30-40 percent. This will allow architects to use glass in a more creative way because larger expanses of glass are possible without incurring additional cooling costs. The product is available in a wide palette of colors.

New Designs From StreetSmart

The new StreetSmart product line encompasses an extensive variety of site furnishings such as custom and standard shelters, kiosks, lighting bollards, litter containers, traffic control modules and custom light fixtures. All these products are produced to meet the individual specifications of designers, architects and landscape architects involved in meeting the requirements of urban community development or redevelopment projects.

Pictured here is an installation in Tampa where the broad roof was intended to shield transit passengers from the blazing sun and frequent driving rains so common to semi-tropical Florida. The slender supporting columns offer no impediment to the prevailing breezes. The pre-aged copper roof with its standing seams and green louvers pays respect to the architecture traditionally associated with the Tampa Bay area. The materials used were selected to withstand the heat, humidity, sunlight and salt-laden air typical of the Gulf Coast.

NATURAL GAS FIRST CHOICE OF TODAY’S NEW HOME BUYER

“We’ve been building with natural gas for 27 years, and even when our home buyers are given an energy choice for their appliances, the vast, vast majority choose natural gas. Why? Because it keeps utility bills down, and it’s cleaner. I wouldn't build a home without natural gas,” said Lester Zimmerman, Greater Construction Corporation.

Sales of 500 new homes a year proves natural gas is what buyers want.

Our Changing Tide:
Future Coastal Planning Issues and Ideas

Tim Watson

Of all the states in America, Florida is most vulnerable to tidal inundation. We have many miles of coastline generally only a matter of several feet above mean high tide. Half of the people in America live within about fifty miles of our oceans or the Gulf of Mexico. Florida's demographics parallel this, and the fact that about 8200 architects are currently registered here belies both this fact and Florida's future mass development potential. Think of this: Southwest Florida's population doubled during the 80's.

Accelerated impact upon wetland ecosystems cannot be avoided under these circumstances, and conversely, our vulnerability to the long term dynamics of coastal water activity parallels this increasing concentration of human activity.

The changing dynamics of our coastline continue to emerge with familiar issues of concentrated runoff, construction near coastline areas, and even the long term planning issue of potential increases in mean sea level. During the 1990 Economic Summit held in Houston, Texas, our United States officials were the only participants among seven industrialized nations declining to join in an international accord regarding global warming. Our country's official "wait and see" position has doubtless had an impact upon public opinion in our state, until recently.

There is, in the midst of awaiting further consequences of our global technology, a growing interest in long term planning. The public we as architects serve is beginning to discern between site specific project planning and long term thinking. We are beginning to look beyond the net effects of development acquisition and energy use, and to ponder the long term environmental costs of present day consumption. We are looking for a new mindset needed to address the flood of new information we receive about how fragile our environment is. We are searching for a language which can image the long shadows now being cast over our children's future.

State regulatory commissions and local utilities have been adopting a new thought process in response to this. It is called "integrated resource planning" (IRP). This forward-looking approach considers the total costs of energy, including societal costs and long term environmental costs.

So what new thinking can we encourage towards helping our children have the same quality and quantity of natural resources we now enjoy, or perhaps a standard of living even comparable to ours?

Three ideas are not so cost prohibitive as to obviate immediate consideration. One is to develop a mapping database appropriate for comprehensive tidal inundation studies. The better knowledge we have of our coastline, the better we can predict its future natural changes. A second idea would involve supporting statewide coordinated long range coastal zoning and planning. Long range planning has a better chance of addressing the dynamics of natural coastal change and corresponding wetland preservation. The third, and most fundamental step, is to endorse as a statewide goal, a statement of purpose concerning coastal zone planning. As recognized by our A.I.A. representatives in Washington, D.C., we must have a clear purpose set before us before progress can be made.

In Washington, work is currently underway in response to a request for wetlands policy review by the United States Environmental Protection Agency. As a result of earlier work, the National Wetlands Policy Forum issued as its principle national interim goal the adoption of a national wetlands protection policy "to achieve no overall net loss of the nation's remaining wetland's base." Although the current administration in Washington and development interests are attempting to reduce by definition what constitutes the presence of wetlands, the effort by this Forum serves to show us the importance of establishing clearly defined goals no matter what politics are at hand.

Similarly, it is within our capacity to support our state's adoption of long term planning goals as part of a comprehensive coastal zone plan. We as individual practitioners cannot effectively coerce our clientele to do what is environmentally responsible. We must for the most part rely upon and urge our regulatory system to enforce development policies in the long term interest of Florida's future. Additionally, whenever the opportunity arises we can support public acquisition of environmentally sensitive coastal land preserves.

What is needed is acquisition of a contemporary database wherein it is possible for planners, architects, local jurisdictions and private insurance interests to better predict appropriate construction/development guidelines. This requires one foot interval mapping for an accurate comprehensive modeling of our lowland coastal areas. It so happens that this information can be obtained by several means which are currently at hand, and at costs ranging from several million dollars to perhaps 30 million. This cost is indeed a small price to pay for acquiring information not only germane to immediate planning interests, but also absolutely necessary if we are to be better prepared for whatever longer range planning issues come into focus in future years.

How architects can be involved:

- Support state, regional and city government coordinated commitments to a clearly defined wetlands policy guideline of no net loss. Preservation of wetlands and their boundary areas not only helps towards the recharging of underground aquifers, this policy improves our chances to reserve irreplaceable marine nurseries, and avoid high risk exposure to flooding.

- Sponsor and support significant improvement of existing coastal zone mapping database resources as a first step towards effectively planning for the future dynamics of our coastline.

- Encourage public acquisition of land areas subject to flooding, particularly where there is potential for future natural development of marine ecosystems at higher tide levels.

We are witnessing the first indications of not only changes in the earth's polar ice caps and a resulting current minor change in tide levels, we are seeing a change in the tide of society's growth policy attitudes as well. Only with foresight and a willingness to participate in leading our development community towards true symbiosis with nature's process can we avoid getting swept away by forces which are inevitably greater than ourselves. Let us work towards a zero net reduction of our remaining coastal resources, and establish a means by which we will be better prepared to address the fact that our oceans are as dynamic as we are.

Tim Watson has a Master of Urban Planning from Rice University. He is a licensed architect in Florida, pursuing an active interest in The National AIA committee work on wetlands legislative issues. He is currently in private practice in Tampa.

DON'T ASK US . . .
ASK OUR CLIENTS!

Dear Joan:
Thank you for everything these past couple years. You have given me a new outlook on insurance companies. It was nice having my questions answered by an actual person. You never were rude or abrupt and always fast in settling claims. I sincerely appreciate your cooperation, patience and kindness.

Fondly,
GD

Is there a difference between insurance plans? You bet there is!
