"I do my daydreaming right here!"

"And, believe it or not, the dreams are about the day I leave home! Don't get me wrong ... I love it here. Mother knows how to keep her houseful cheery as larks! No breakfast grouches ... no weary blues. Small chance of that when each of us starts the day with a lathery shower ... and a song-coaxing workout with a Cannon towel. That's just it! Home is wonderful, but I can't wait till Jim comes back to feather one of our own! With a bathroom beautiful as all get-out. And Cannon towels for two ... he-size ones and me-size ones ... bright as a flower-bed, in thick, soft heaps. Big dreams for a fledgling pair like us? Uhuh ... Cannon prices, I know, will make the outlay sweet and low."

Let your imagination off its leash when you make your Cannon bathroom plans! Once our war orders are ended, there'll be new shades ... the smartest yet ... textures, designs and matched sets galore to start brides off on their best foot, and brighten the homes they leave behind! Whatever your taste or budget, there will be towels to fit ... because Cannon, the world's largest maker, can promise variety and value besides.
"Can we make it short?" asked Guy Lombardo. "I have to be on my way to rehearsal in five minutes..."

The popular orchestra leader—busy with broadcasts, recordings, nightly appearances—had long been hoping for this opportunity to hear the Meissner. "But now I'm afraid I can't do it justice."

Guy, himself, touched the button starting the automatic record changer and watched the metallic arm as it quickly, silently selected a record and gently placed it on the turntable. "It's amazing," he said.

Even more amazing was the Meissner's ability to play both sides of a record in sequence or repeat any record, all at the touch of a button. "You could sit here and enjoy this for hours without touching a record," Guy said, "but now let me hear this Meissner play..."

All else was forgotten, now, as the music took command. First, came a series of the great classics—with each note as clear as if the musicians had been in that very room at that very moment. There were no "missing elements" here to annoy the experienced listener—nothing blurred or adulterated. This was music as the "Diamond Horseshoe" itself would know it!

From the classics, Lombardo went on to his own field of popular music. "You know," said Guy, "it's hard to believe that good reproduction alone could make such a difference in popular music. I've heard those records before—but never have they sounded like this..."

Later, much later, Guy Lombardo looked at his watch. "Well, I guess the band got along without me," he grinned. "But they'll forgive me when I tell them about the Meissner. What a set it is!"

Guy Lombardo had just been listening to the only Meissner radio-phonograph in existence—perfected just before war turned all of Meissner's skill and knowledge to the manufacture of electronic war equipment. The instrument is now on loan "for the duration" to the music room of the high school in Meissner's home community, Mt. Carmel, Illinois.

Your luxurious postwar Meissner radio-phonograph, in a distinguished cabinet of your own choice, will combine unexcelled reproduction and completely automatic operation with Frequency Modulation, Super Shortwave, and a host of other advancements now being engineered into Meissner electronic equipment for our armed forces around the world.

What moved them as they listened was a song they had danced to the weekend they first met. A song that rooted deep in their memories... just as some song, some symphony, some little tune has become part of your life.

Even when you share that music with someone who feels as you do... what you think about, what you see, what you dream is yours alone.

Because so much of the pleasure you share and so much of your inner satisfaction depend on how well the music you like is played... you will want FM more than you have ever wanted any kind of radio.

As Stromberg-Carlson will bring FM to you, you will hear the full range of musical tone for the first time, virtually without interference or static! Reproduced flawlessly as only Stromberg-Carlson has learned in 50 years to reproduce music!

IMPORTANT: 200 broadcasters have applied for license for FM radio stations. Within 18 months after war's end, this new, clearer, better kind of radio will be available to 100,000,000 Americans. Stromberg-Carlson will offer FM receivers over a broad range of prices.

The ageless melodies of Chopin live again through Magnavox

High above the cypresses of Majorca, the wasted figure of a man bent over an ancient piano. There was no Parisian dazzle here; nothing but drab walls matched by the clerical gray of monks padding by on missions devout. For Chopin—poor, tubercular Chopin!—had been routed from his home by the local health authorities and obliged to take refuge in a mountain-top monastery.

Now, let us contrast this scene of a century ago with an American room of today. Logs crackle on a broad hearth. There is an air of comfort, contentment, luxury. Center of it all, of course, is the Magnavox radio-phonograph. From it comes one of Chopin's monastery masterpieces—a song of the wind, the stars, the mysteries of the night—made vividly realistic by the true-to-life tone of Magnavox.

Often will this scene be repeated in the months to come. For Chopin melodies are featured in the new Columbia Pictures film, "A Song to Remember," and many will then be re-played on the air or made available on records. Either way, you will enjoy them all the more because of your Magnavox radio-phonograph.

Magnavox is doubly an investment in good living. First, because it provides that absolute faithfulness of reproduction which has made it the chosen instrument of such great artists as Ormandy, Beecham, Horowitz, Kreisler, Heifetz and many another. Secondly, because Magnavox is a beautiful piece of furniture, worthy of the finest home. Styles range from the traditional to contemporary designs. Compare Magnavox with any other instrument and you will never be satisfied until you own one.

Send for Reproduction of Paintings: Set of ten beautiful paintings of master artists and composers from the Magnavox collection. Here are dramatized events in the lives of Tchaikovsky, Wagner, Stephen Foster and others—portraits of Kreisler, Toscanini, Rachmaninoff, etc., painted by famous artists, reproduced in size 11"x9", suitable for framing. 50¢ at your Magnavox dealer, or send 50¢ in War Stamps to Magnavox Company, Department HG2, Fort Wayne 4, Indiana.

"Jane seemed so young to be going away to college the day she left. I looked around her unsophisticated bedroom and I knew she wouldn’t be happy with it four years later. I decided, right then and there, I’d make her room ‘grow up’ with her. It will be no problem, either! I’ll start with a colorful all-wool Floor-Plan Rug, and you’ll be surprised how little else I’ll have to change."

...A Floor-Plan* Rug can make that much difference!

MODUFLOW

MODUFLOW is Honeywell's newest development in heating control systems for the home. It means heat modulated to just the comfort temperature required, with a uniform continuous flow. In the modern home it will take the place of ordinary "on and off" heat control. It is an exclusive development of Minneapolis-Honeywell.

... MEETS THE CHALLENGE OF TOMORROW

The homes of tomorrow will demand comforts and conveniences far beyond our present standards. Honeywell stands ready to meet that challenge with Moduflow, the remarkable new heat control system. It has been acclaimed the greatest advancement in house heating since the invention of automatic controls.

Moduflow operates on an entirely different principle from that of ordinary "on and off" control systems. It provides a continuous flow of heat at the temperature required for comfort under all kinds of weather conditions. It will do away with wasteful overheating, and the drafts and cool periods caused by intermittent heat supply. Instead of overheated ceilings and cold floors, you will be completely surrounded with a cozy blanket of warmth at just the comfort temperature from head to foot.

Moduflow is now available for a very limited number of existing homes, as well as for postwar homes. Make your heating plant truly modern with a Moduflow control system. Consult your heating dealer or send for the interesting booklet, "Heating and Air Conditioning the Postwar Home". It tells about the amazing, continuous, even comfort that Moduflow can bring to every home owner at a price within reach of all. Mail coupon today for your free copy.

If your radio belies the Tuba as a grumbling bass, wait till you hear its majestic voice on a Scott.

It's true that the Tuba can harrumph with humor in a witty passage, but its normal voice has a fundamental vigor that partakes of majesty. If you have heard it as only a low rumble in the brasses, you are due for a revelation with the Scott.

The sole purpose of the Scott is to bring to your unbelieving ears all the music that's played—undimmed and undistorted. The long roster of musicians who choose the Scott for their listening pleasure, and to check their own recordings by, attests the Scott's amazing veracity. But until you have heard it for yourself, revealing new beauties in a familiar score, you will not easily believe how much a Scott can enrich your life.

Plans are in the making for a Scott whose talents will be even more memorable than the Scotts-before-the-war. A leading department or music store near you will soon, we hope, be displaying the Scott with considerable pride. See it and hear it for yourself!
Heloise to Abelard

"What cannot letters inspire? They have souls; they can speak; they have in them all that force which expresses the transports of the heart; they have all the fire of our passions; they can raise them as much as if the persons themselves were present..."

Abelard, most famous logician of the 12th Century in France, fell in love with and married the
when Abelard was the tutor of Heloise, before tragedy had crossed their path.

After 800 years their love still lives — in letters

It is dawn. The faint blue light rising over Notre Dame burns slowly brighter than the lamp in the room. But brighter still, far brighter, burns the flame in the hearts of these two lovers. He a famous tutor, she a girl of seventeen.

Eight centuries have passed since this love story was lived against the background of Medieval France — a story which lives still in all its beauty and all its poignancy — in letters.

Letters capture a precious closeness between two people. They are voices carrying through the silence that separation brings. Are you learning this for the first time? If you are, remember after the war and all your life, what joy a letter can inspire — what pleasure it can give.

In war... in peace... your letters are you. They carry your love, your laughter, to the uttermost parts of the earth... or just around the corner.

Looking Forward

HELP YOURSELF—AND YOUR ARCHITECT—BY KEEPING YOUR MIND OPEN TO NEW IDEAS

A great many millions of us are going to build a new house “after the war”. We’re looking forward to that day—and to the wonderful new materials and equipment that science and industry will surely provide and which will help us to create a new and better way of life.

But are we really looking forward—as individuals?

What kind of a house will you tell your architect to design for you? Will you tell him you want every feature that will contribute to modern living; and then tie his hands by adding “but it mustn’t be a modern house”—or words to that effect?

We may as well face it. We clients are, as a group, the most backward-looking element in the whole picture of American architecture. We can’t blame the architectural profession when we deliberately search out men who will cater to our timid reference for something “safe” and sterile as against something new and healthy and forward looking. We can’t blame the profession if we don’t give the men with real ideas a chance to show what they can do for us.

But let us suppose that you and your family are different. You realize that life after the war will be full of taxes and empty of servants. You recognize that there is a close relation between such hard facts and the design of a home which will help you to bear these hardships more easily—which will give an impression of spaciousness, and even luxury, without requiring you to build a mansion—which will give you the fullest use of the things that save steps and work and time.

You have grasped the significant fact that great advances have been made not only in the world of science and industry, but equally in the professions that organize and assemble the elements that comprise a home.

It would be a healthy thing if all of us, before we begin our postwar planning, would take time out to check our position and see whether we are facing forward or backward. Do you visualize your new house as a sort of formal façade behind which you will arrange the pattern of your daily life as best you can? Or do you feel that a carefully considered solution of your individual problem will suggest the form your house should take? Will your house be built to fit you, or will you be trimmed to fit a house? To a much greater degree than many of us realize, it’s up to us what kind of house we’ll get.
If your house is too small

TOO MANY PEOPLE IN TOO LITTLE SPACE? A POST-WAR ADDITION ALONG THE LINES SUGGESTED ON THESE FOUR PAGES MAY BE THE SOLUTION TO YOUR PROBLEM

Here is a fairly typical small house with two bedrooms and a bath upstairs in addition to the rooms on the lower floor. Ordinarily we try to avoid going through one room to reach another, but in this case it seems a good expedient. The new bathroom fills the need for a powder room, and the bedroom could, if desired, be arranged to serve as a combined study and guest room. Continuing the wall and roof surfaces, without the usual jog, the addition costs less, the whole house takes on a new identity, more restful, easier to look at, more closely tied to its site.
As the family expands, the house often seems to shrink. We put two children in one bedroom but as they grow older we must either provide another bedroom or sacrifice the guest room. Similarly, we discover the need for some relatively quiet place for use as a study. In the example shown here, the library is added to the living room, thereby helping to balance in appearance the large mass of the garage. In this case, the child's bedroom might open from the master bedroom; but this might not be considered a drawback as the room could be converted into an upstairs sitting room when the children reach school age.

INSULATE FLOORS over unexcavated areas and walls adjacent to unheated areas such as a garage. Attic rooms should be especially well insulated and thorough provision made for cross ventilation.

AVOID PLACING DOWN-SPOUTS in inside corners. Proper drainage is very difficult in such locations, and may cause seepage through the foundation wall into the cellar. In any event, the soil is apt to become too sour and stay too wet for planting.

STUDY PROPOSED ROOF PLANS carefully and avoid complicated roof conditions with poorly drained valleys. It is not unusual that a plan which in other respects seems to work very well, must be abandoned because it creates an unworkable roof condition.

IN SHINGLING THE NEW ROOF, be sure to match exactly the over-lap of the existing roof. This is just as important as matching the color. Similarly, wall shingles, clapboard, or siding should be treated as in the original house. And in the case of brick or stone masonry, color, pattern, and mortar joints must be followed in the new work.

If your house is too small continued

- NARROW STAIRWAYS may be “space saving” but remember that large pieces of furniture will be carried up and down those stairs. If stairs must be narrow, avoid turns. And in any case, be sure to provide plenty of head room at all points. Steep stairs with narrow treads and high risers are a common cause of serious injury.

- AVOID CRAMMING A BATHROOM under the eaves and lighting it with a narrow dormer. The sharp corner between the upright wall of the dormer and the sloping ceiling of the bathroom will crack many a skull.

- WINDOW SILLS are quite commonly too high. You may have to keep the height set by existing windows for the sake of appearance, but if not, keep the sills low enough so that you can easily see the view when seated.

- AVOID SWINGING THE DOORS in such a way that they cover usable walls when open. Doors that can swing into each other are a constant menace and nuisance and this condition too should be ruled out.

TO ADD A LARGE LIVING ROOM

For this problem we have chosen the case of the owners who found a charming little old house with a straight-through hall and a room in each of the four corners. By originally adding a kitchen wing and a bathroom, they contrived a very snug and comfortable home which had only one serious flaw: the living room was too small to hold more than two or three guests at a time. The new living room not only corrects this but creates a feeling of spaciousness which makes the smaller rooms the more attractive by contrast.
In this one-story house it would be difficult to add a guest bedroom to the existing bedrooms and we wish to avoid opening directly from the living room. We therefore build what amounts to a little guest cottage and connect it to the house by means of a covered porch which could be screened in Summer and glazed in Winter. This device affords an unusual degree of privacy to the guest room and at the same time adds a desirable living area. This addition could be made in any direction from the living room.

- YOUR LIGHTING AND WIRING PLAN should be carefully studied. Fluorescent light will go a long way to give your new rooms a thoroughly up-to-date look. Provide plenty of switches and outlets. If there are two doors into a room, put light switches at both.
- WHILE THE ELECTRICIAN IS IN the house, have him put one or two base outlets in your upstairs hall. You will then be able to get your vacuum cleaner into every bedroom without moving heavy furniture to reach the outlets.
- "DEAFEN" ALL PLUMBING LINES; that is, wrap them in an acoustic material which will minimize sound transfer from such lines.
- CHECK THE CAPACITY of your present heating system to see whether it is adequate to take care of the proposed addition. If it is not adequate and your house is uninsulated, you may be able by insulating to save enough heat to provide for the new room or rooms.
- IF THE NEW ADDITION is quite large, you may need a separate small heating plant of which several excellent types will be available after the war.
Bathroom divided by two

SPACE PLANNING, BY ARCHITECT LESTER TICHY, IN TWO VERSIONS OF ONE DESIGN. FOR POST-WAR FILES

A. Entering from the bedroom, the dressing closets are at right. The dressing area opens into the woman's bath with the tub in the corner, and a wash basin mounted in a continuous counter which becomes a dressing table built against the window. The man's section, at right, also has a built-in wash basin and enclosed shower. This 12x18 foot area affords the convenience of a dressing room and two bathrooms with obvious economy in space and fixtures.

B. at right, is identical except that the dressing table and the window wall have been moved back.

Convinced that the "master bathroom", especially, can be developed into something far more useful than the commonly accepted version, HOUSE & GARDEN invited Lester Tichy to make a study of the problem. His suggested solution, shown here in two versions, large and small, is unusually interesting and, we believe, may exert a real influence on bathroom design.

The plan is such that a man and his wife can use the room simultaneously without getting in each other's way and with whatever degree of privacy is desired. It takes advantage of the generally accepted preference that men have for showers and women for tubs. Two wash basins—a convenience in any master bathroom—are placed back-to-back, so that each half of the room is entirely independent of the other.

Both plans on this page are alike in all essentials. The larger version, shown in color at right, is simply an extension of the smaller to provide an exercise area for the man and a more relaxing and luxurious environment for his wife.

There is nothing clairvoyant about the fixtures—they are all existing models, the kind you already have or will be able to buy as soon as manufacturing restrictions are lifted.
TRADITIONAL

FOUR EXPERTS SUGGEST NEW PAINT SCHEMES FOR FOUR TYPES OF HOUSES

J. FRANK JONES, DECORATOR, RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

Faced with our request for color ideas for four types of houses—small traditional cottage, the larger, more formal type, and two modern—Mr. Jones made the suggestions which are charted in color at left. Note that Mr. Jones does not confine himself to traditional color schemes but proposes less commonplace combinations, some of them with rather bold accents. Adding a few general observations on exterior color schemes he says, "Remember that dark colors and light colors are literally tools. Light colors always help to make things look larger; dark colors help to make things look smaller."

L. MOHOLY-NAGY, DIRECTOR, CHICAGO INSTITUTE OF DESIGN

Head of a leading school of contemporary design, he says: "Fortunately, in this country, most single houses are surrounded by trees and other vegetation. This directs the design of the color rather automatically. White can act as a projection screen for the rich shadows of the trees. To use green is unwarranted, except as camouflage, since nature is full of green. What one can do is paint the baseboards dark so that rain splashed dirt is not too evident, and use a few color spots by which houses can be identified—but tactfully, to avoid causing dissonances with neighboring houses."

H. LEDYARD TOWLE, PITTSBURGH PLATE GLASS CO.

Director of color engineering for a large paint manufacturer, Mr. Towle considers paint not only as an essential preservative, but also as an architectural tool, especially in renovation or remodeling. He points out the ability of paint to correct flaws in the symmetry or general appearance of the house. For example, he says, "If the house seems too high for its length, a dark roof will make it seem lower. If such a house has shutters, paint the shutters of the upper story the same as the roof; this will visually bring the roof line still lower. Paint the remaining shutters the color of the wall."

M. REA PAUL, CONSULTING COLORIST, NATIONAL LEAD CO.

Mr. Paul, co-author of "The Dictionary of Color", quite properly points out that whereas color details and general suggestions such as his own, at left, are useful, the relative size of areas on which the color is to be used plays just as important a part in the ultimate effect as do the colors themselves. The shape of the house, whether it is tall and compact, or low and rambling, is also of great importance, and he suggests that each house should be considered individually to determine whether the best effect is gained by placing emphasis on the horizontal or the vertical areas.

FORESIGHT BEFORE YOU BUY LAND AND BUILD YOUR HOUSE WILL ENABLE YOU TO HAVE A HOME LANDING STRIP LATER

TO TAKE OFF AND LAND, a plane needs a straight strip, obstacle-free, with a sufficiently firm surface. Where wind direction is constant, as in a valley, a basic L-shape will suffice. Variable winds necessitate an L- or T-shape. Well-drained sod gives a good surface, makes a neat green ribbon on a plot. The strip pictured here could be shared by four families, costs only a few hundred dollars.
MORE COMPLEX PATTERNS are merely multiples of the single strip, situated to take advantage of changing winds. With present light plane design, two strips at right angles cover almost any wind shifts that might arise. Windsock shows which strip to use, white tape marks boundaries. Here a T-shaped strip on two ridges provides natural drainage and an obstacle-free approach.

Five acres can be a home-base for you and a plane, if your land lies right. Whether or not you are sky-minded now, tomorrow your friends and your children will be flying and the home-with-a-future will allow for this. Consider a landing strip as you consider a driveway in drafting your land plans. A wise appraisal of level and layout of prospective land will enable you to place your house strategically, earmark land for future development, maybe instigate the purchase of just a little more land to make a strip possible, and probably affect your decision on the final site. Go half-and-half, or quarter-and-quarter with neighbors in planning strips between adjoining properties. The larger the strip can be, the better. Augmenting the Civil Aeronautics Administration plans for intown airparks and cross-country flight-stops, landing strips on home ground make flying even more accessible, planes more usable.

Answering “how big is a landing strip?” is like answering “how wide is a road”. Landing requirements vary with the size and power of the plane, the volume of traffic, the height of nearby obstacles. The heavier the plane and the faster it lands, the longer the strip must be. In taking off, the higher the strip above sea level, or the softer its surface, the longer the run to get a plane into the air. Some light planes, under ideal conditions, can land in 100’. But present specifications consider the worst combination of wind, load, and human miscalculations and call for a length of 1,500’ minimum for light planes (2,000’ recommended by the C.A.A.) and a width of 200’ minimum. For every foot of obstacle—a tree, hill, or building—at the ends of the strip, add 10’ of extra length. Any modification of this is between your conscience, your flying skill and your plane manufacturer, for the performance of a plane dictates the length of the strip. But for the present, allow the minimum, and as much extra as possible. Friends with heavier ships may come to call.

There will be every kind of private plane from a flivver to a station-wagon, planes for short-hop commuting, long-range vacations, business trips, or just plain diversion. There will be “hot” fast planes, as sensitive to control as a fine horse, favorites of experienced pilots who consider flying an art. There will be “armchair” planes, with safety built into the controls. They may not cut a figure in the sky, but they’ll get there with the least responsibility on the man at the wheel. Two-place, four-place, vest-pocket or luxury craft, with prices from $1,500 to $25,000 and up—needs and pocketbook will determine the choice.

Hovering on the horizon are the two dream children of the sky—the helicopter and the roadable plane, that folds up its wings and drives away. Complicated controls make the present helicopter unsafe for general public use, although experienced pilots feel at home in it. Some engineers predict it will be over five years before the technical “bugs” are ironed out. When ready, the helicopter will need a sizable landing spot away from the house, as the down draft from the rotor blades is strong. The roadable plane, when it proves itself a good automobile and a good plane, too, will need a conventional landing run.

In the meantime, improved design in conventional planes—air brakes, flaps, adjustable pitch propellers—is steepening the angle of taking off and landing, slowing down landing speeds to make possible landing in smaller spaces. Tricycle and swivel landing gear are combating the wind problem in landing, so some day only a single strip may be necessary. (Continued on next page)
Many factors in the past have held back private flying—the biggest one, cost. Make no mistake—flying as an occasional sport is an expensive luxury. But a plane that is used frequently means more hours in the air, and the cost of personal flying per mile decreases sharply as the hours add up. Direct operating costs are small—with some planes, less than with an automobile. If the large charges—initial cost and yearly insurance rates—are amortized over 250 hours of use a year, flying can be a practical service. New safety features on planes are allowing insurance companies to reduce their rates. And many aviation companies will include flying instruction in the cost of the plane. Incidentally, given sound sight and normal reflexes, age is no deterrent in learning to fly a private plane.

Too many regulations have also been the ties that bind. The C.A.A. protected the early development of private flying by requiring many hours of training, a plane check-up every 100 hours, a complete log-book—rulings to protect the flyer from his own carelessness. These have been revised to put the emphasis on public protection, as automobile regulations do. Special new rules for private flying stipulate a plane check-up only once a year, do away with compulsory log-books, shorten the hours of instruction needed to obtain a license, allow a pilot to do minor maintenance and repair on his own plane, if he cares to. With safer planes, improved methods of instruction, navigational aids, the licensed pilot can be handed back his responsibility.

Navigation has been a bugaboo to many, and regulations requiring this study in order to qualify for a license are being amended. Already in use is a system of air-maps covering the country as completely as our roadmaps today. These will be complemented by markers, painted on barn-tops, highways, planted as shrubbery, invisible on the ground because of their scale, but graciously apparent to the straying flyer. As clean-cut as our major highways will be the radio flight beams, interlaced over the country mainly for commercial flight lines. While the first private planes will not have expensive automatic controls, simple radio equipment can be installed to make use of these directional beams. For the present, however, light-plane flying will be by visual contact, and only in good weather.

The sketches of home landing strips shown here are to start you thinking. If you’re really getting down to cases, we suggest you consult a local airport engineer, or write to the Civil Aeronautics Administration, Washington, D. C., for specifications. Next month, look for plans on starting a group flying club and building a community airpark.
PLANES LIKE THESE CAN LAND ON HOME GROUND. Light planes are economical to operate, land on minimum length strip. Heavier ships fly faster, farther without refueling, carry more passengers, need longer runs to take off and land. Choose according to plans and pocketbook. 1. Light favorite, Piper Cub, carries two, cruises at 85 mph, has range of 350 miles. 2. Stall-proof, spin-proof Ercoupe is easy to fly with single control wheel, easy to land with tricycle landing gear, cruises at 105 mph, 525 mile range. 3. Next step up in size is three-place Ryan S-C; cruises at 135 mph, 500 mile range. 4. Famous for vertical flight, the present helicopter takes skilled hands to operate, cruises at 80 mph. Bell. 5. Luxury craft is Grumman’s five-place Widgeon, with twin, high-powered engines, versatility on water and land; cruises at 150 mph, 675 mile range. 6. Light two-place Luscombe Silvaire equipped with pontoons, can land on shallow stream; cruises at 100 mph, 325 mile range. 7. Fairchild’s F-24 can fly a family of four, cruises at 105, range of 520 miles. Today’s models shown; post-war planes promise to do even better.

RATE YOUR LAND FOR AN AIRSTRIP. The chart below is a rough measuring stick for judging your property. If the left column describes your land, just hoist a windsock. If the right column sums it up, you’d better use the community airpark—unless the sky’s the limit on expense. If your land lies in between, call up the man with a bulldozer and begin bargaining. Modern machinery, war-developed, can chew up trees and level some fields in a matter of hours.

Stretching the kitchen

Suggestions by Virginia Hart on planning

For the extra space your house may need

Doing over the kitchen is a popular cure-all for whatever ails the house.

Though it will never offer complete immunity to dull food or disappearing cooks, a new kitchen does remedy so many troubles that it deserves its place in remodeling plans. The advantages of new appliances and equipment are obvious and exciting. It's easy to imagine what a dishwasher, an automatic range and a big-enough refrigerator will mean. And the thought of good cabinets just where and how you want them seems reason enough for starting right in on the kitchen.

Because the new kitchen equipment is so good that it seems an end in itself it's easy to miss the chance of using kitchen space to solve the special problems of your house. Maybe it's a laundry, or a comfortable and pleasant dining place that is missing. The lack of play space for small children may have upset what was otherwise a well-planned house. Perhaps canning and home freezing are hopelessly complicated because "there just is no room for it". Whatever extra space is needed, look at your kitchen with an eye to finding it. Not by cutting down the kitchen to one of those compact little rooms that make for claustrophobia rather than cooking, but by carefully locating the large equipment within the room to make separate planned spaces for cooking and whatever else you need.

Forget that modern kitchens must be U-shaped, L-shaped, two-wall or what-not. Kitchen equipment should be arranged to form a production line, as continuous as possible with work-tops between the appliances. There's no reason why this equipment must be installed against the wall and there are great advantages in turning corners and setting it out in the room to make a definite cooking space. The actual floor area needed for such a carefully planned cooking space is surprisingly small and since it is not partitioned off it will have all the pleasant open feeling of the large kitchen.

The remaining space should be planned in detail for whatever use you want. List the things you will use there, measure any large equipment and work to a simple scale on paper to be sure your salvaged space will really serve your purpose. If it is to be a dining place try to have it next to the living area of the house. Easy access to the outside door has obvious advantages for a children's play space but a laundry complete with dryer can be located wherever there is light and work space.

There can be no set rules for apportioning the space for the shape of each kitchen and the location of its doors and windows will set certain limits within which the plan must be maneuvered and developed. On these and the next two pages we show four average kitchens, remodeled as we suggest.
IN THIS CITY-KITCHEN the cooking space is arranged in an unusual but practical plan at one end of the room to provide good space next to the living area for pleasant, comfortable dining. Sliding panels on the dividing cabinet cover two-way shelves and a serve-through counter. Two small ranges and a storage cabinet under a continuous stainless-steel top make a perfect combination with a vented and lighted hood above.

THE MODERN-HOUSE KITCHEN takes full advantage of its window-wall. The sunny play space for small children is near the outside door, has a toy cupboard under the big window-garden and a folding gate to mark out-of-bounds. As children grow up this becomes a breakfast space. Refrigerator, range and dishwasher-sink are arranged in one continuous production line. Cabinets for linen and silver are placed next to dining room door.

THIS BROWNSTONE’S KITCHEN retains its leisurely, spacious air though it has been re-planned right down to the last inch to include a complete laundry as well as good cooking space. Automatic clothes washer and dryer are side by side. The electric ironer, stored under the work-top, pulls out for use. The old pan closet now has a louvered door to match window shutters and is given over to the day-worker for her clothes and belongings.

4 IN THIS COUNTRY KITCHEN a special place for freezing, canning and preserving has been worked out at one end of the room. The low second sink is convenient for blanching foods and handling large kettles. Storage space and ample work-tops, one comfortably low for sit-down work, adjoin the freezer. The convenient cooking space includes an out-size refrigerator and a six burner range with built-in space heater.

1 The city kitchen borrows from the Regency for a distinctive dining space. Simple white pilasters and moldings define the space and accent the vivid green walls. The serving counter and glass shelves lighted above and backed by sliding panels are as decorative here as they are practical in the kitchen.

2 A modern-house kitchen with its glass walls, smooth surfaces and abundant sunlight calls for a bold use of dark colors lest the room be a glittering glare. The modern plaid paper used here on the sliding cabinet doors sets the tone for the dark gray-green ceiling and the reds of the flooring and work-tops.

3 The brownstone’s kitchen loses, in remodeling, its dingy walls and curlicue encrusted ceiling. The good points are held over and refurbished so that bright white trim and inside shutters, a comfortably cushioned window seat and pink walls with a deep blue floor now give to the room a fine Victorian serenity.

4 The country kitchen follows the good country tradition of pine cupboards and white-washed walls. The old twelve-over-twelve windows are topped by simple valances of blue and white cotton. The painted floor has been given an old fashioned "spatter" finish and the open cupboards lined in a rich red.

Mr. and Mrs. Seton Henry's New York library designed by William Pahlmann, now Major Pahlmann U.S.A. The quiet green board and bat walls, the understated fireplace, slim sconces make a vertically pleasing background for the fine books. Shadow-greenish chairs are unobtrusively flattering to the Aubusson rug of faded, overcast colors. The self-covered bench draws its color from the rug pattern, as do the urns and lamps. Books and rug have color affinity.

Open your eyes! Open your mind! There's a world of color around you and all yours for the seeing. Give face to a room and wit to your house with color. A flair for color isn't a matter of artistic legere-demain or premeditated spectrums. Take a willing eye, uninhibited imagination and persevere. Look about you and consider.

There is a house in California painted the gray-blue green of the mold on an orange. It was planned that way. The owners and architect worked hard to get that shade. It was made for the spare, burned hills and eucalyptus trees and as a background for brilliant flowers. Doubtless the painters shrugged their shoulders knowingly and muttered in their brushes, but the house was a great success.

Perhaps you have a very special Paisley shawl inherited from a seafaring branch of the family. Look at it in the light of a library. So many of the tones of this pattern are matched in bookbindings that you can see how well the basic red would do in your library, with a lamp or chair picked out in Paisley yellow, and a floor in black.

Teacups are often excellent forecasters for color schemes. A fine bit of Crown Derby gives a wonderful palette for a living room. Darkish blue walls with a china-white trim, a burnt Sienna sofa and mirror-polished brass to gather light are positive after-imagery from staring at the cup.

One New York decorator derived very happy inspiration from the sudden sight of a blue garbage can trailing a bit of watermelon. The blue combined with the pink, greenish white and green were a color perfect combination. Melted chocolate in a yellow mixing bowl is enough to start chromatic imagination progressing up and down the scale.

Look around you for color contrasts. Shades your more pedestrian mind would never bring together may flash across your sight as complete soulmates when seen in natural coincidence. A dusk-blue sky sheared by a lighter greeny-blue streak sets off a brick-red chimney and lavender neon sign. Recollections of a Mediterranean cruise or a technicolor travelog can start a fine flair of color contrasts crackling. Blazing North African white gashed with the black-brown of Cyprus wood, enameled with turquoise tiles and set against a background of dirty-pink sand is a color plan to consider.

Look back on museum tours or foot-weary visits to ruins. The shell-pink cupids sporting on a Pompeian red fresco among olive green swags and gray cartouches have as much color interest as they do archaeological importance. Remember the faded blue of jeans, the straw-beige of corn shocks, the cherry-brown of old harness all mixed up with the last green buds on creek willows. The unaccustomed appeal of one strange color against more commonplace arrangements may occur to you, if you have a canny eye for your surroundings.

Pick your schemes from old wallpaper, a seed catalog, a painter's sample book. Look for color in all the homely objects around you as well as in the sunset or in a seascape. The labels of tin cans crowding your kitchen shelves may be tender to your imagination. An old (Continued on page 89)
Mr. Victoria, brilliant New York antiquaire, has made his apartment as personally his as his autograph. He has neither period phobia, nor period mania, but uses his elegant baroque furniture intelligently and unconventionally. There is no pretentious reverence for museum-pieces. His color schemes have vitality and give a non-sectarian lift to his historical collection. The living room is done in bronze and lime greens, a decisive flash of persimmon orange. The Eighteenth Century bedroom has a modern color pattern of faded blue and Turkey red. Louis Seize, Eighteenth Century Venetian, even Empire, Provençal French go together willingly in Mr. Victoria's high-ceilinged rooms and cast fascinating shadows on his bland, clean walls. The furniture has been painted with a light hand which helps to give it architectural continuity with the rooms and to synchronize the other pieces.

The regal bed, said to have been given by Louis Seize to a friend of Marie Antoinette’s, is curtained in blue striped silk, which cascades from a wooden coronal to the elaborate posts, carved into torchères. The Venetian desk, rococo and scrolled as the figurines on one corner of it, is painted white like the bed. The desk chair is covered in off-white, the bedside chair in a faded red reflecting the red carpet. Blue silk curtains and paler blue walls provide a pleasant, contrasting background.

Natural limewood mirror frame carved by a great craftsman surrounds the reflection of another corner of the living room. The odd corner chair seen in it is of the Adam period and is covered in off-white.
Elegant living room with pale lime-green walls and a bronze-green carpet. The huge mirror is painted bronze green, the two white chairs surprisingly covered in persimmon leather. White and persimmon sconces make arabesques on the wall. The Empire piano, made by Pape in Paris in 1815, was once in a Metropolitan Museum collection. The fireplace of marble is intricately contrived as a very fine watch.

Diverting parlor tricks

EXHIBITION ROOMS AT B. ALTMAN
An old Dutch walnut card table centers a group in a room in the baroque manner. Walls and curtains are palest aquamarine, as is the upholstery by Scalamandre on the chairs. The chest is brilliant scarlet with white painted hardware. A fine parquet floor, innocent of carpet, is stained pale water-green, and heavily waxed and polished, giving almost the effect of marble. Almost any color can be used; the stain may be readily removed.

Ready for a buffet party, the long butterfly maple table is set between windows hung with white tufted bedspreads in lieu of curtains. Above it, a white-painted rack holds a colorful collection of Red Tower china, figurines, and Ironstone pieces. Ladderback chairs are painted white, rush seats and all, striped in green, and softened with seat pads of the cabbage rose chintz. Pickled pine commodes with mirror doors hold lamps at either end of the sofa.
Hotel room into home

Martin Kahn, New York business man, took the housing shortage by surprise and materialized a hotel room into a delightful apartment. One wall is his office, one his living room. One wall is a bedroom, one a library. All four are ingratiatingly attractive. The mise en scène is Empire with touches of Biedermeier and collector’s curiosity. A music cabinet has become a bar. Chests and artful tables conceal domestic necessities, allowing the room to keep its grand manner. The great Napoleonic bed is formally stylized as any drawing-room furniture. There’s an opera-house red carpet on the floor and the walls are elephant gray. Raw-silk curtains, dyed pinky-scarlet, cover one wall, centering the off-balance windows and concealing a jutting partition. Conversation-grouped chairs, low table and a graceful couch set up the living-room wall. The office wall is half-spanned by a flat-topped Empire desk and backs up the radio. Bibelots and repetitive color knit the room together.

The couch, upholstered in gray satin, has a painted gray frame, porphyried in the colors of the room. The tortoiseshelled, glass coffee table is flanked by chairs covered in saffron yellow and taped in beige and red.

Old toile, rosy red and white, covers the bed. Red raw silk covers the bolsters. Small pedestal tables on either side are good storage place and hold gilt lamps that point up the ormolu work on the bed and old chair.
At home in a hotel—a one-room apartment neatly contrived as a yacht's galley. The furniture is grouped for three-room living and held together by carefully chosen accessories and color transposed in splashes or spots punctuating the room—scarlet molding on the frames, scarlet Aubusson rug on the carpet—a bronze doré hussar lamp, match-mate for Empire brass work—a tortoiseshell box keyed to the chairs.
The amphitheatrical plan of New Canea makes sense for uncongested living and industrial growth.
The future of a Greek town

THE REBUILDING OF CANEA ON CRETE TYPifies THE REBUILDING OF GREECE

The Germans attempted to murder Greece. They did not succeed. But they left her badly wounded. At least 500,000 Greeks are dead from assassination, starvation or disease. At least 1,500,000 are homeless. Liberation is not enough. Greece must be fed, re-clothed and re-housed. There are whole towns to rise, phoenix-like, from their ashes, whole areas to be re-built if Greece is to have post-war existence. The problems of one Greek are the problems of all Greece.

Canea, capital of Crete, has already been reborn on paper. Robert H. Podzemny, a young Czech architect, working with the American Friends of Greece and their committee of architects, has projected the future of this ancient of towns in a well-defined plan.

Canea, called Kydonia in the centuries before Christ, is said to have been built by Minos. Homer tells how Menelaos brought his ships to her harbor in refuge from the storm. As one of the last strongholds of the Greek and British army during the first invasion of Crete, it was almost completely wiped out.

Rather than re-build the city on the rubble of millenniums, the plan is to move it a few miles across the narrow peninsula from Canea Bay to Suda Bay, where the fabulous harbor will bring it the greatest possible prosperity. Old Canea will then again be called Kydonia and turned over to the archaeologists. A museum will be built in New Canea to house what promise to be finds important as those at Knossus. This should bring double prosperity by attracting tourist and student trade. A good highway between the old and the new will take care of sightseers, diggers and farmers.

New Canea fits into the curve of the bay like a giant's stadium. It has been planned for comfortable living, industrial functionalism and practical market facilities. But the fabric of Crete, and the character of its very individual people have not been brushed aside in a rush of future-perfect Utopian planning. The wide highway that bands the town is to be paralleled by a narrower track for farmers who will walk their donkeys and drive their goats come helicopters and high water. Camps, like ancient caravansaries, are to be spaced along the highway for farmers who cannot afford a hotel or who prefer less metropolitan accommodations.

The houses themselves are conceived in the spirit of native materials and available skills; simple construction, familiar to every Greek artisan, local stone and lime mortar used as it has been for centuries with a great feeling for handsomeness. The heavy walls are native insulation against the Cretan sun. The small beams are cut from the arid pine or rejuvenated olive that cover the hills. Even seaweed is used, to build up flat roofs just as the laborers used it in the days of the Labyrinth. The simple lines of the houses will make New Canea look modern as a world's fair, but they are as traditional as a temple. The simple plans permit subdivision of the space and future additions to meet growing needs.

The superbblocks, airy complexes of living quarters, are planned to have surrounding open space for play. (Continued on next page) grounds. Knowledgeable consideration will be taken of the gardening and husbandry talents of the people for there will be space enough for homely livestock and ground enough for small crops.

The market, to the right of the mall, is to be a large open space with sheds for livestock, wares, an agora of lively trading. Nearby at a comfortable distance are to be two main shopping centers, one on each side of the mall. Smaller stores and shopping centers will be located throughout the residential area following the arcs of the main streets.

The harbor, one of the finest in the Mediterranean, will easily service the largest liners. But the dock section is built for the people of Canea, and will lead off with small docks for the vivid fisher fleet that has sailed the Aegean since Odysseus, the large piers coming after. The industrial zone, back-to-back with the docks, will be well placed here, as soot and offensive odors can be carried off by the prevailing west and northwest winds. Practically and realistically, a naval base is to be built beyond the industrial harbor.

As in ancient Greek towns, the civic center will be New Canea’s focal point. The town buildings, on a slight promontory, acropolis-fashion, will be impressively solitary but easily accessible through the wide avenues. Between them emblematic as the omphalos at old Delphi, will be the town’s war memorial. The pattern of Greece continues, for this may be a group of ancient columns from all over the islands, semicircled about a symbolic tower and flame.

The park about the center will be criss-crossed by pleasant walks and biased, near the motor-boat (Continued on page 88)
Old Canea, sea coast town when the Phoenicians were the travelling salesmen of the Mediterranean, had a pre-war façade of esoteric charm that hid a maze of tortuous alleys and exhausted houses, made livable only through romantic inertia, flower pots and tradition. The building of a New Canea is a made-to-order opportunity to throw aside indifference and give the Cretans a standard of health, an economic independence and a political validity higher than they have ever had. It is some payment for the sacrifices made.

Street in Old Canea that meandered on its crippled way through the sentiment and dirt of centuries. New Canea will keep sentiment but see to wide, sunny streets and houses set back and apart.

At the left, the Grand Staircase in the palace of Minos, Knossus, Crete. It was built in 1800 B.C., the house to the right many centuries later, but this type of construction, post and lintel, formed the home of the Minotaur and is still seen in Cretan homes today and will be tomorrow, handsomely fitting the landscape and life. The archaic, tapering columns are reflected in the newer ones which are built of brick.

Traditional Cretan houses, set firmly on the earth, shaded by olive trees. The floors of pounded earth or rude concrete are durable; the roofs are cool against the hot sun.
Cater to your friends

Good food, hospitable intimate of good conversation, is proof of an understanding friendship and a measure of skill in living. The planning of a meal, its proud preparation are an epicurean handclasp to a guest. Good food, like most good things, isn’t show-off. It isn’t a moil of difficult dishes, paper frills, pink sauces and oyster forks. A magnificent hash, handsomely served, teamed with a superlative salad is as golden a tribute as stuffed plovers’ eggs. If a guest cherishes baked beans, serve baked beans. But surprise him with subtle accompaniments to his favorite dish. Flatter his discernment with your own personal fillip to a menu.

Good food like good conversation takes to small groups. A small dinner, perfectly patterned for taste, texture and color and laced with the proper wines, is the sumnum bonum compliment to a good friend. Sturdy potluck is a warmhearted welcome, but a carefully premeditated meal is subtle encomium at its zenith. Here is a master-menu for a dinner for four—no red ration points necessary. COMPLIMENT TO FINE FOOD—COMPLEMENT TO A GOOD MEAL

There's been a good deal of whole-hearted nostalgia about fruit since Paris chose the golden apple for Venus and Eve showed her cosmic lack of will-power. Even the names of fruits are delicious: Sevilla oranges, Persian limes, Beurre d'Anjou pears, Malaga grapes.

Fruit is beautiful as it can be sentimental. It is the tactful and perfect finale to a good meal. At the peak of glowing ripeness it needs no sophistry of seasoning or cooking but stands firm on its own delights. Winter pears, Comice or Winter Nelis, are pure gold as they come. Winter grapes, crystal clean and trailing gracefully from a bowl, are dessert enough for any fish dinner.

With a trick here and there, however, frozen fruits and home-packed are an additional delight in Winter and for any-season compromise choose from these opulent variations.

There is a purée of green-gage plums that is celestially delectable. Mash, with a silver fork, the pulp from a can of plums and cook gently about fifteen minutes. Strain and press through a medium strainer. Take the reserved juice and add to it half a cup of pineapple juice, fresh if you can manage it. Beat a third of a cupful of light cream until frothy light and blend with the juices carefully. Pour this sauce over the plums for gourmandise.

Fresh apple sauce and stewed rhubarb are a delightful combination. Stewed strawberries and stewed fresh peaches are mysteriously appetizing. Raspberries and peaches have an appealing affinity for one another. Wash and chill a pint of berries. Peel and slice silver-thin six peaches, putting them in the coldest part of the refrigerator for ten minutes, well covered with sugar. Add the raspberries tenderly to the peaches and cover with the juices and a flattering dash of curaçao or kirsch.

When serving berries alone try using brown sugar instead of white for a happy variable. In rationing times cream-cheese pressed through a ricer and powdered with nutmeg is an almost-better-than whipped cream substitute. Ice cream beaten to the consistency of whipped cream is banquet-special when poured over strawberries and flavored with kirsch, or heaped on blackberries and seasoned with vermouth.

Apples, king of fruit for Americans, are unashamedly perfect just as they come, or with a sprinkling of salt and nutmeg on them raw and ice cold. But for party finesse bake them, cored and peeled, in sauterne. Reduce the liquid when they are done and decorate the apples with almond halves. Pour apricot preserve into the liquid and cook to a syrup. Then glaze the decorated apples with the syrup after adding a tablespoon of brandy to it.

Golden oranges of poetic fame and chamber of commerce pride can be cooked with great distinction. Baked oranges are pretty as they are good and look Cellini-esque on luster plates. Boil as many naval oranges as you'll need—one to a person. After an hour of fairly vigorous boiling, cut in halves cross-wise. Core each half, place on a baking sheet and fill the hole with brandy-soaked brown sugar. Sugar the tops and rind as well, dotting them with butter and trickling more brandy over each half. Enamel in an already hot oven, being careful not to burn the edges. Serve with a remotely fragrant sauce of orange juice, water, cornstarch, cointreau and brandy, or pour flaming brandy and cointreau over them.

Chinese insistence on texture shines through Oranges Oriental. Remove the skins and membranes from the oranges by plunging them in boiling water. Heat the gently disengaged sections in enough orange juice to half cover and put heart into them with enough brandy to taste. Serve the oranges hot with a covering of slivered almonds and shaved candied citron.

Bananas take very politely to the oven. For a supreme dessert try baking them in wine. Dip six whole, peeled bananas in beaten egg, dust... (Cont'd on page 34)
The anatomy of taste

A NECESSARY KINSHIP BETWEEN YOU, YOUR LARES AND PENATES, YOUR TASTE

• She kept a silver dollar on the mantel. That was for the first lad who sighted her husband’s ship and raced to tell her it would soon be in port. Though he might have been away two or three years, no captain’s wife wanted her man just to walk in on her. She had to put her house to rights, start a good meal going, dress in her best. Then she could sit down a moment and wonder what he looked like now—and what he was bringing back to her.

They always brought back something, those sailor men. A jade Buddha from Shanghai, a lacquered sewing table made for her in Canton, a painting of his ship against the background of Venice, a length of upholstery damask bought in Genoa, a fan from Paris, a couple of armchairs from Bordeaux, a rug from Turkey, an ivory inlaid box found in a London shop, a glass bowl from Ireland. Pretty things, fine things. And maybe a birdcage he had whittled, or bits of scrimshaw scratched on tusks to while away long, monotonous days.

Somehow these strange things from far away always fitted in. They went with that sideboard made in Philadelphia, those square-back chairs from New York, that Paul Revere teapot, with the sampler she had embroidered while he was gone.

You can still see those clipper-ship captains’ homes along the New England coast—on Nantucket, Martha’s Vineyard, the Cape, and up the shore North from Boston. Houses with a conglomeration of things from foreign parts mingling in accord with things made here. Why do they fit?

The answer to that is the answer to why some rooms hang together and others do not. It is more than harmony or contrast of colors, so dear to decorators; more than the curve of a chair back repeating the curve of a sofa’s arm; more even, sometimes, than scale. It is far subtler than these visual differences and affinities.

Those who study esoteric matters have a saying that all mystics speak the same language because they all come from the same country. Furniture and objets d’art all speak the same language when they come from the same level of sophistication, or concept of beauty, or manual skill.

Cabinetmakers in country towns along the Eastern seaboard made furniture copied after pieces that hailed from London. At the same time cabinetmakers in French country towns were turning out chairs and tables after samples brought from Paris. Put the two together and they harmonize. Each shows marks of the same country crudity.

An intricately carved table gallery and an intricately carved walrus tusk show the same level of manual skill. The lacquered sewing box from Canton and the ivory inlaid box from London meet on the same level of craftsmanship. In the glass bowl from Waterford and in the Revere teapot we find the same skillful handling of a chosen material. Between the countless stitches in the sampler and the countless threads in the rug from Turkey lies a relationship that makes them kin. There is affinity between a delicately fashioned piece of jade from old China and a delicately fashioned fan from old Paris.

Placed together, one level of sophistication, concept of beauty or style of craftsmanship may furnish something another lacks, thereby giving livableness to a room. Consider a period room, for example, a room done throughout in exact period style. Today that exact reproduction of the past seems sterile. Or a modern house filled only with modern furniture. That, too, is a period. Certainly both of these stem from pronounced levels of sophistication or taste—the period room from the taste level of that period and the modern furniture from a striving to arrive at new principles of design and usefulness. And both fail to satisfy completely because they contain no objects that are long loved—no homely lares and penates.

None of us stays forever on the same level of sophistication, else our lives and homes would be stodgy. Time and added experience change our notions of what is beautiful. Whereas we may start by being fascinated with objects that show manual dexterity alone, we soon enough demand that they be also well made. Even the most dexterously carved chair must still be sat on. And yet, if our lives and homes are to be harmonious and livable, we must turn on the influences and things that enter them a critical judgment in which both intrinsic worth and the human equation play equal parts. They just don't happen to fit. They fit because they are related to each other—and to us. The ship captain brought the things that meant something to him: he probably left behind shiploads of things that meant nothing. Or, if he happened to make a mistake, his wife saw that it discreetly disappeared while he was on his next trip.

No matter what the style of room, we should put it to the test of this question: How is it related to us? We can't give a snap answer: we have to live in that room for a time, learn what it lacks and what can be discarded.

Nothing is more painful than watching unsophisticated people striving to adjust themselves to sophisticated surroundings. Equally painful to see are people with apparent taste in other matters displaying none in the furnishing of their homes. In both cases the objects in these rooms may be beautifully related to each other but not at all related to what their owners actually are or are becoming.

Perhaps we ought to emulate the awaiting ship captain's wife: sit down and think over what kind of people we really are. Perhaps we ought to keep a dollar on the mantel for the first person who comes in and tells us, "Be yourself."
Chief Rosarian of the Men's Garden Clubs of America, C. Eugene Pfister describes 1945's roses, most of them thoroughly tested in his garden in Mundelein, Illinois.

- Pleasant surprises await the rose lover of America in 1945. Startling colors—among them a tangerine-orange and a gray—make their first appearance. New red, pink, apricot and yellow débutantes will win acclaim with their exquisite blooms. For those lucky enough to procure plants the newcomers will widen the range of uses in home gardens and offer unusual possibilities in the art of flower arranging.

MIRANDY, one of the three winners of the nation-wide 1945 All-America Rose Selections competition, is a Hybrid Tea, red with black shadings. Deep, dark, pointed buds are formed on strong canes and unfold to gorgeous, crimson, double blooms. This perfection of form and color is greatly enhanced by damask fragrance, rich and delightful. In its brief existence Mirandy has carried off top honors wherever it has been shown.

FLORADORA, another 1945 All-America winner, is a Floribunda that bears clusters of camellia-shaped flowers of medium size. It is a scintillating and vivid tangerine-orange shade, variously described as orange-scarlet or cinnabar red. The plant habit is good as it makes upright, bushy growth with handsome deep green foliage. To complement the flowers, the bark and twigs have a reddish cast. It is a very free-blooming rose.

HORACE McFARLAND, another winner, is the third rose to be named for the eminent rosarian, now in his eighty-fifth year. This Hybrid Tea bears large buds of copper-pink which unfold to full-petaled flowers of a glowing apricot shade. The plant is upright, of good vigor, with large leaves. It gives an abundance of bloom throughout the season, and the moderately spicy, fragrant flowers are most pleasing at all stages.

GREY PEARL, a new Hybrid Tea, will arouse differences of opinion, perhaps violent ones. Its full, double flower, during the season, changes from a light olive-gray tinged with a deep pink, through shades of mauve and mauve-violet, to a pale gray with pink and lavender markings. Pointed buds open slowly to a high-centered flower which has a pleasant, mild fragrance. The foliage is shiny, dark green and the flowers are carried on long stems. The bush is vigorous and disease-resistant. Grey Pearl should be in strong demand for flower arrangements as it blends equally well with deep or pastel shades.

MRS. MINIVER, captivating as the lady in fiction, is a brilliant red Hybrid Tea. The slender, dark, pointed buds are almost black. Although it cannot be called a fully double rose, the flowers are quite large and the petals when wide open are ruffled, creating the illusion of fullness. The medium-sized bushes bear almost continuous bloom and the foliage is heavy and glossy. The fragrance is a pleasant old rose.

VANITY FAIR, dainty shell pink Hybrid Tea that is already in vogue in florist shops, is available this year for the first time to home gardeners. Richly fragrant, its double flowers and well-formed buds are attractively set off by dark, dull green foliage. Home grown bushes, as well as those produced under glass, bear long, strong stems that give Vanity Fair special value for cut flower use.

SHANGRI-LA makes its début this Spring. Its large coral-pink buds, tinged at the base with gold, open to bright, pink flowers of well-rounded form. Plants are of upright habit, good shape, fairly strong growth for a Hybrid Tea.

YOUNG FRANCE heralds the liberation of France. A sturdy, soft pink variety carrying double flowers proudly erect above the foliage, this rose has model form both in bud and open flower and a pleasing fragrance.

SHOW GIRL, an unusual deep shade of rose-pink, is a Hybrid Tea which produces remarkably large and perfect buds. Generous with its flowers, the plant is vigorous with foliage attractive and abundant. This rose makes a very fine cutting variety because of its long, straight stems and lasting quality.

PINK SATIN is another new bedding rose which can be classed either as a Hybrid Tea or Floribunda. It is a very clear, brilliant, true rose-pink that has proven itself dependable and hardy. Its shimmering beauty has been much admired in the East where it underwent the testing period at the New York Botanical Garden.

NEARLY WILD, a wichuraiana hybrid, brings to our gardens the dainty loveliness of wild, pink roses. Well named, it blooms without restraint and when firmly established spreads to a width and height of three feet. It has undergone severe Elizabeth Meade, landscape architect of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., describes a flat garden she and Eleanor R. Paepcke designed for Mrs. Charles S. Schmettau in Sharon, Conn.

A flat site, broad horizons and several fine trees, these were the given quantities with which we had to work at Carrier Close, country home of Mrs. Charles S. Schmettau, Sharon, Connecticut. The owner wanted a garden that was colorful throughout the year. It must present a satisfying landscape picture from the comfort of the spacious porch and also have happy combinations to view at close range.

The horizon itself and the vast expanses of sky are integral parts of the design. Wide steps, large openings into and out of the garden proper, all dimensions are kept generous to accentuate the over-all effect.

A hedge marks the limit of the flower garden but does not isolate it from the larger landscape beyond. Undulating tops of shrubs and trees on the lawn are the skyline boundaries of the garden but even these have wide breaks so the distant low hills remain in the picture. Within the flower garden a fortuitously placed maple tree is a vertical foil for these long, low lines.

Though the land, when first viewed, appeared flat we discovered it had a slight grade away from the house to the West. This and the position of two existing elm trees flanking the bay of the porch made the location of the garden seem properly to be there.

So we graded the slope to three levels, connected by steps. They are so arranged that a person standing at the top of the first flight can look down the wide green panel of the main garden into the pool at the center of the little square garden. There are four steps in the first flight and three in the second. Had the order been reversed the near side of the pool would have been invisible from the head of the first garden.

The design of the steps themselves is in keeping with the flatness of the land. They are very wide and shallow, to avoid any feeling of precipitous descent. The steps and their accompanying walls, being the sole architectural elements of the garden, carry the burden of stabilizing the design. The garden house shown in the plan has not yet been built.

After the contour of the land had been taken care of we worked out the part trees and shrubs were to play as structural elements in the design. I have already spoken of the two elm trees on the lawn between the house and the garden and the maple tree inside the flower garden. Lacking, for the time being, the garden house at the end of plan, the garden is firmly closed by dark green masses of Austrian Pine that back the pool garden.

Lawn areas are defined by shrubs, in groups or as a hedge, and to the East of the house the extensive lawn outlined by existing trees was left to fulfill the design with its own great simplicity.

Since the house is close to the road the approach is direct, by a brick path from the gate to the front door or, for automobiles, by a circular turnaround that fills the ell between the house and the garage. A path from the turnaround to the front door widens on its way to make a little terrace—an excellent spot from which to catch the early Spring sun and enjoy the daffodils bursting through the green ground-cover of the dooryard garden. Everywhere else circulation is very free and open, directed solely by the placing of trees and shrubs.

A small enclosure of hemlock North of the house was turned into a rose garden. The service buildings, like the house, were in existence when the landscape design was made in 1939.

With the skeletal form thus firmly established we turned our attention to (Continued on page 113)
The plan breaks down into the following groups:

1) Proposed garden house; 2) pool garden; 3) perennial (upper) garden; 4) peony border.
5) Residence; 6) suntrap garden; 7) garage and gardener's cottage; 8) drying yard; 9) tool shed.
10) Rose garden; 11) proposed cutting bed; 12) greenhouse; 13) salad garden and beehives; 14) coldframes.

Bulletin Board

A monthly miscellany of diverse thoughts and excerpts gleaned from the editor's scrapbook

Like the Maquis, the Bulletin Board went underground, to pop up—of all places—here. Here where it has the elbow room of two widely columns and the amenities of uncrowded words may be observed. A relatively ancient institution, it has served as a place to pin up diverse thoughts and excerpts since September, 1922. Scarcely a mail arrives but some Loving Reader sends us notions for it.

Shooting lady

Even the best of modern equipment cannot interfere with old habits. Among our country neighbors is a smart, youngish bride who hails from the West, where she was trained to be quick on the trigger. Her kitchen, re-modeled to her own desires, is streamlined. But all the modernity indoors did not prevent a plague of muskrats creeping from the nearby river to devastate her garden. So, beside the modern sink she kept a loaded rifle. If Mr. Muskrat appeared within her line of vision through the kitchen door, she casually turned off the Master Mixer, sighted her rifle—and another varmint bit the dust.

For collectors

No matter what you collect, buttons or Botticelli, stamps or statuary, required reading is “Lock, Stock and Barrel: The Story of Collecting,” by Douglas and Elizabeth Rigby. There's not a phase of our magpie instinct missing from the 570 pages of this book. The fakers and the foibles and all the strange things that mortals collect will furnish anecdotes enough for conversation at a hundred dinner parties.

Timber

As fast as war requirements lessen, our factories will be reconverted to producing civilian goods, but there are some necessities which cannot be provided merely by a change in wartime tools. One of them is timber. The war and fires have taken a terrific toll of our forests. John Doe and his wife, anxious to build that new house or put on that addition, will have to be patient. Adequate supplies of building lumber will not be available for at least six months after peace, and you may as well realize, too, that the bills will be higher.

Winter diversion

From Winter walks bring home a handful of dried, open seed pods collected along roadside and through meadow and by streams. Then, when the night.

Beloved pigs
An affection for pigs can easily be acquired. Once they have crawled, as it were, into your heart, they're there for keeps. And so it seems to have been for a long, long time. Look at any collection of ancient ceramics and you find Bro. Porker glorified. Look at any folk art and, sooner or later, out from the jungle of various designs, he comes rooting and snorting. A frankly mundane beast, the pig makes no effort to disguise why he likes you. A dog is capable of guiltless affection but the pig shares with inahs that direct relation between his stomach and his heart. Feed him and he loves you.

Rooms and people
In the lush days of the '20s, when decorators were going high, wide and handsome, decoration was considered an art. Beautiful rooms created, their owners adjusted themselves to their new surroundings as best they could. Today it is a craft. The owner has much more to say about surroundings because he or she knows more about decoration and realizes the important things in a room are the people who live in it day after day.

Call it luck or what you will—in this favored spot high above the Caribbean in Puerto Rico, the mountain air and water and the fertile soil and tropic sun happen to be just right for distilling a great rum like Ron Merito. Try this “mountain rum” in a cuba libre, daiquiri or rum collins, or give yourself the delightful surprise of an old-fashioned, a sour, or a Manhattan made with Ron Merito. See how your repertoire of drinks can be extended, with a really good rum! Be sure you get Ron Merito.

Watercress soup is a subtle, fragrant soup that should be simmered with care to bring it to a pale jade turn and preserve its fleeting flavors. Wash a pound of watercress thoroughly and dry in a towel. Chop fine and let simmer in three cups of chicken stock or a bouillon cube broth. After twelve minutes pour off most of the broth and set aside. To the watercress add three tablespoons of chicken fat or butter and cook gently for about twelve minutes more. In another saucepan melt two tablespoons of fat or butter and blend in flour carefully. Add the reserved stock and cook slowly with constant stirring, for about seven minutes and season with salt and a few peppercorns. Put the watercress back in the broth and heat for about a minute and then pour in a cup or two of top milk and bring to the right temperature gently. At the last minute lace each serving with nutmeg.

Breast of duck flambee is an entree with éclat and a memorable dish. Have the breasts of two ducks cut in half. Wash and dry well. Mince the leaves from five or six stalks of celery and a small bunch of parsley and cook in a very small amount of broth made with chicken or vegetable bouillon cubes. When the liquid has simmered down to three or two tablespoons set aside. Gash a clove of garlic and cook until transparent in two tablespoons of olive oil in a heavy skillet. Remove the skin and brown the duck in the oil. Remove the duck to a hot plate and add the celery and parsley to the oil. Grate the rind of an orange and the rind of half a lemon into the oil with seasoning to taste. Lay the ducks neatly in a greased casserole and pour the sauce over them. Cover and bake in a moderate oven about twenty minutes. Just before serving spike the duck with two tablespoons of brandy, lighted. Let it burn off before serving.

Apple butter timbales are to duck what chestnut stuffing is to turkey. Serve them hot around the bird. To two cups of apple butter, add enough corn bread crumbs to permit you to model the apple butter into timbales. Dip the timbales into a well-beaten egg and roll again in flour and more bread crumbs. Fry in deep fat until crispy brown. Olive oil or peanut oil are the most satisfactory and may be re-used, and stored for many cookings.

Rosemary broiled tomatoes are savory eddors for duck. Halve firm, large tomatoes, spread with a mixture of cracker meal, dried rosemary and melted butter and seasoning and broil.

Anchovy-spread biscuits have tang to complement the blander duck. Just tear baking powder biscuits in half with fork and spread with anchovy paste and heat briefly again.

Lime Freeze is a delicately astringent finale for duck and when no champagne is being served is doubly delicious with a jigger of rum poured over each serving. Make any standard sherbet flavored with lime and add a half cup of chopped mint to it. Serve planted with a sprig of mint in each dish.

Thin French Gaufrettes are texture-perfect with any ice.

them with a generous amount of flour, float them with sprinkled sugar, and dab them with butter. Place them companionably close together in a buttered china baking dish and pour half a cup of strong port around their edges. Bake in a hot oven for twenty minutes, basting frequently. Add another half-cup of wine and bake another fifteen minutes, basting after ten minutes and just before serving.

Bananas Monso are a Latin turnabout. Peel and roll the fruit in brown sugar, dot with butter and place in a baking dish. Pour lime juice and dark Jamaica rum over them and bake in a moderate oven, basting frequently.

Green figs are ready for eating when a drop of juice appears at the eye and the sides fairly split. Peel ripe figs with a silver knife, make a core in them and fill it with raspberry jam. Pour a liberal twist of port over the jam and cloud with whipped cream.

The pineapple, noble fruit, is spectacular enough to need little embellishment, but with a turn here and a twist there it becomes a royal feast. Large Hawaiian pineapples are the best to use when one fruit is to serve several people, but small Cuban pineapples are very becoming to individual plates.

Cut a big pineapple in half, scoop out the pulp and cube. Set this aside to absorb a quarter-cup of kirsch, and to become thoroughly chilled. Make a cream mousse flavored with almonds. When the mousse is almost firm stir in the pineapple and allow to set until quite firm. Ladle this prodigiously into the shells, arrange picturelessly as a Dutch fruit painting on a silver platter and climax your dinner.

Or top a pineapple, scoop out the fruit and mix the pulp with frozen blackberries or blueberries. Refill the pineapple with layers of black-raspberry ice, fruit mixture and maraschino like a pousse café. When serving put the green crown on one side of the dish, wreathed with any left-over fruit and let the filled fruit take the spotlight in the center. The smaller, more astrangent, Cuban fruit make conversation-piece individual desserts when treated this way.

Quartered pineapples served simply with grated green coconut and lime juice are as spirit-lifting as new daffodils. Papaya, peeled, and speared on silver knives at each end, corn-on-the-cob fashion, with half a lime to squeeze over it and resting on cracked ice is a tropical temptation (Continued on page 88)

FOR THE ARTISTIC SMALL HOME.....
A BEAUTIFUL GARAGE DOOR

Because it is so prominent a part of the "front" of the modern small home, the garage door takes on unusual importance and should be selected with a discerning eye to its appearance in the ensemble.

The example above illustrates how effectively the Crawford Upward-Acting Door conforms with the design motif of a typical cottage type dwelling.

Crawford has been building fine quality, well-designed, dependable Upward-Acting Garage Doors for over 15 years. More than 150,000 in daily use. GARDENER'S NOTE BOOK Night jobs for the impatient gardener and ways of anticipating Spring. By Richardson Wright

Moly
Our first piece of lily leek, Allium moly, came to this garden through the generosity of Louise Beebe Wilder. Long before she went, it left the garden through some mischance. Only last Fall we replaced it and from now on we intend to give it watchful care. Not that it needs it especially, for like all this flowering onion tribe, once they are established they flourish with the opulence of a nuisance. Once we raised all the varieties of them available from seed—all but Moly—and ever since have been generous with them to unsuspecting friends.

Delighting in light shade, Moly can companion that other shade-loving, Summer-flowering bulb, Star of Bethlehem. It lifts its yellow pompom flower 8" high and, once established, will spread.

Early forcing
One of the simplest ways to anticipate Spring is forcing branches of early-flowering trees and shrubs. We usually start it the first week in February and for that purpose, even though they are homely, use milk bottles to begin.

Cut the branches on a day that is not too cold, strip off a couple of inches of bark on the end, soak overnight in warmish water, and the next morning set them in their separate bottles. Until ready to flower they should be kept in a cool sunny room—some corner that doesn't go higher than 60°. Charcoal in the water will prevent stagnation. Then, when the flowers are ready to break, you can move them into whatever fancy vases you choose and display them around the house.

Slow blueberries
Patience is the best virtue for gardeners, and for many plants the best manure. We realized this one December afternoon when, walking around the place, we sought out the line of hybrid blueberries we had planted in the lee of a pine grove. The first season they seemed to stand still, the second they displayed some ambition to grow. We fed them old manure and pine needles. This third Winter their twigs are reaching up a foot or more. Perhaps our earnest expectation will finally be rewarded with fruit when Summer comes around again.

Tough fern
For all its fairy grace, the maidenhair fern is one of the toughest of house plants. (Continued on page 87)
plants. It may die back and generally act cantankerous, as ours does, but new growth keeps coming up from the bottom. A daily light spraying and the shady side of the plant window are its cultural requirements. It prefers soil of equal parts of sand, loam and leaf-mold with some dried cow manure and a pinch of bone meal and a few lumps of charcoal. When the roots become pot bound, the plant should be divided.

Snowdrops

Before long we will be watching for the first venturesome snowdrops. We always note the date of their first flowering but forget them in the rush of other early bloomers—forget when they cease to flower. In gardens where you are going to change crowded patches, this is an important slate to watch. As they are going out of flower, lift, divide, spread the roots out carefully in their fresh home and they will gather up enough nourishment for the newly forming bulb without check. This year we are surely going to remember!

Night jobs

The seed order has long since arrived and now, anxious to get at it, we spend an evening marking tags. Here are old friends and new. If seed comes to us in Latin, we proudly spell it all the way out!

Then another free evening, the tags of plants we've not grown before spread out on the desk, we pull down books and read the various cultural directions for each, putting the information on cards. From these, too, we can figure where the plants are to go for best display, or what location they need and type of soil to assure their flourishing.

These two jobs save a lot of time later on and prevent mistakes. But even with all this care, some of the goldarn things don't grow. First we used to blame the seedsmen, then we blamed ourselves, but now, after twenty-five years of successes and failures, we've concluded that some plants just don't like this place.

Small leaves

There is just as much need for observing the principle of scale in gardens as in rooms. To plant a big-leaved vine around a slim sundial just doesn't go. We've tried it, found it offended the eye, and have changed to the less assertive Ampelopsis lowei. A good digger, once it is established, it clothes whatever it covers with a tight, small-patterned mat. Its only drawback is the jaw-breaker botanists have fixed on it—Parthenocissus tricuspidata laui. How those botanists do like to use big words! When visitors ask, “What’s that?” instead of showing off, we answer, “Low’s Boston Ivy.”

VIGORO-fed early will help you enjoy a healthier, more beautiful lawn—richer—greener, freer from weeds!

Right now, before the frost is out of the ground, is the ideal time to feed your lawn with VIGORO. Spring thaws will aid in working the plant food through the honey-combed soil to root-level.

Feed VIGORO now and see for yourself the workings of VIGORO magic. Luxurious, deep-green grass... so beautiful it looks like velvet... so strong and healthy it chokes out weeds!

Get this complete plant food now. Feed it right away! Don’t forget! Now’s the time to lay in a supply of VIGORO for your vegetable garden. Make sure you have plenty on hand at planting time by ordering it from your dealer well in advance.

base, by a main promenade for all travel, a promenade to run from the wholesale market area and harbor to the bathing beach. The circle of the bay front will be all park-like, running down to meet the seaplane station, surrounding the Government buildings, backing up along the river to the edge of the town. A big recreation and restaurant building is planned for the eastern side of the park where the people can gather for the favorite Cretan pastime, talk.

Red Tower Ruin, almost as old as Crete itself, will be preserved in its landscaped area as a monument to the great Cretan Kingdom of thousands of years ago.

The town is roughly divided into three sectors. There will be a school in each area with open spaces for sports and play. The main education center for higher schools is to be laid out in the park along the river’s banks. On the outer circumference of New Canea, areas will be set aside for the squat, domed churches, within easy walking distance of the homes. Many of them may be built in close connection with the schools, sharing the same plot of land.

New Canea will be new from the ground up. Newer health measures will govern it, guide it. A hospital and health center to the North will help in rebuilding the people. The industrial plans and marketing facilities will help in reconstructing the economy. But the traditions of centuries will leave their mark everywhere, making New Canea a town for Cretans specifically, not an ideal for a homeless people in general. All that is beautiful, indigenous, and peculiarly Cretan will be kept, as it should be. Reconstruction is not revolution, it is rebirth.

It is to be hoped sentiment will not stand in the way of such a broad plan. When the Persians sacked the Acropolis in fifth century Athens, the citizens discarded all sentiment and rebuilt their city to the greatest glory it had. Earthquake levelled Knossus many times in its history, and until their end the ancient Cretans rebuilt their palace, writing in fresco and stone the most brilliant chapters of Cretan history. A New Canea is in order, of spiritual as well as physical necessity.

guaranteed to offset February gloom.

Fruit, no matter how it is served, should be sparkling-clean, colorful as it deserves. Polished apples in a wooden bowl, lemons and grapes in a silver epergne, berries piled in a basket, pears in a golden heap on a bed of moss are something to eat with verve, to look back on with joy. Fruit is a natural dessert, picture-prety appetizing, picture-prety decoration.

These, and the harmonizing service plate are by Castleton. Crystal water glasses and goblets, with teardrop stems, and matching fingerbowls are by U. S. Glass, also at Georg Jensen. The simple, beautifully shaped sterling is Wallace's "Antique" pattern. Soft gold monogrammed napkin, elaborately monogrammed, is from Mosse.

English Regency girandoles in bronze dore and crystal are from A. R. Nesle. The Empire white and gold compote is from Attman-Weiss. Four fluted Sheffield salt cellars from Edward Garratt were used as ashtrays. Mahogany Empire chairs are from Cassanl Romano.

PAPER CHASE

We know you save your daily and weekly newspapers for salvage. We know you use a shopping bag and carry packages unwrapped whenever possible. We know you return cardboard laundry boxes, egg boxes and such so they can be used again. But have you gone through the house recently on a paper-salvage hunt?

What about those cardboard dress-boxes, those back numbers of magazines, (including House & Garden), those piles of receipted bills and answered letters? What about out-dated scrap-books, old time-tables, travel folders, garden catalogs? Pile them all on the salvage heap and send them off to active service.

Paper wraps weapons and the ammunition to serve them, food for our own forces and for the liberated people. Paper protects blood plasma on its life-saving journeys. So please salvage it all.

You see, the general layout and color scheme were our own ideas; but when we selected the plumbing fixtures themselves, Tom and I discovered that ELJER offered a lot of important details that had a real influence on the finished appearance of the room. Their up-to-the-minute styling which blends the graceful lines of each fixture into its proper background, caught our attention right away.

Then there was this feature... an overflow outlet on the lavatory is a necessary safety element. However, it needn't be an eyesore always staring you in the face to remind you it's there. ELJER has cleverly concealed this overflow opening from direct view, leaving only an unbroken, gleaming surface in the basin before you.

We wanted the very best metal fittings on each fixture. That was another good reason for our having ELJER quality plumbing fixtures throughout the entire house. See why I'm proud of my bathroom?

FIRE INSURANCE

Before you home owners start doing that paint job in the kitchen that you hope will last until you can get a painter to do it after the war, you should give your attention to one inconspicuous but very important household item. That is your fire insurance. It won't do you much good to have your kitchen painted if your house burns and you don't have enough insurance to cover your loss. Fresh paint will make it burn better.

The tangible evidence of your insurance is a folded piece of paper—your policy—which you probably haven't read. But you should. Your policy contains a lot of very important information, most of it being put there for your benefit. It tells you how much insurance you have and the terms under which this protection is granted to you. It contains certain provisions making it difficult for anyone to run up your cost of insurance by collecting on dishonest or fraudulent losses.

Maybe it hasn't occurred to you that this business of insurance is just a convenient means of providing you with security by getting other home owners to share in your loss if you have one. But don't forget that when losses go up the cost of your insurance will go up sooner or later, so it is to your advantage to have a carefully drawn insurance policy that will keep the cost of your insurance down by providing for the payment of all honest losses but no others. And just in case you are one of the unfortunate, your policy tells you what you must do if you have a loss. Take time now to find out what your policy provides.

Values of homes have gone up during the war years by as much as 75% in certain sections of the country. You might be able to get $17,500 for the home that you paid $10,000 for five years ago if you sold it today, but you can't sell the ashes of your home to an insurance company for $17,500 today unless you are carrying that much insurance.

Don't guess about whether you have enough or the right kind of insurance or about whether your insurance is correctly written. Call in a competent insurance agent or broker. Maybe you already have one but if you haven't, you should get one—one who will give you the service you should have. Seek his advice about your insurance because a good competent agent has the expert knowledge that will enable him to determine what and how much insurance you need. If you have the right kind of an agent or broker you can go on with your painting without worrying about your insurance. You can even lock the front door and take a Winter vacation—your fire insurance will protect you against loss of the values in your home by fire whether you are there or not.

Fire insurance is the most expensive necessity you have in your home. The chances are that if it cost ten times as much as it does, you would pay more attention to it. Even so, you should review your insurance at least yearly because, in spite of its low cost, it is the only thing that stands between you and the loss of your investment should your home be destroyed by fire.

It serves as a firm handle when pouring contents out of a can; when lifting cans out of boiling water. It will open beer cans and in a pinch may even be used as a screw driver. A this, $1.59. Very likely the first Valentines were merely sweet bunches of Spring flowers, with a poetic rhapsody (composed by the devoted swain) attached thereto. It was not until the first half of the eighteen hundreds that some Cupid-inspired printer took a hand in affairs of the heart by selling decorated sheets with love verses inscribed on them. The pen-nibbling beauty, whose poetic talents were unfortunately lacking, fervently acclaimed this ready-made solution to their problems.

What fine engraving, what thrilling doves, and swooning roses went into these first efforts. How elegant were the waist-waisted gentlemen portrayed, (Continued on page 97)

THE ORIGIN of St. Valentine’s Day is unfortunately undocumented. It is believed, however, that it harks back to Roman times. Before the feast of the Lupercalia all the maidens put their names in a box in the marketplace, to be drawn by the young men who were seeking partners for the festivities. The early Christians, who disapproved of the unbridled revelry that went on during the Lupercalia, decided to superimpose a certain restraint on this lovers’ holiday by making it the feast of St. Valentine. As much of the old pagan tradition still remained alive this worthy saint naturally enough became the patron saint of love.

The earliest known Valentine dates from the fifteenth century, was penned by the Duke of Orleans as a prisoner at Agincourt. It is now preserved in the British Museum.
how simpering their ladies fair. And what choice sentiments conveyed a mantling blush to gentle cheeks. . . .

"Of all the joys that bless mankind,
Love's are the most alluring;
And with pure friendship's sweets
combined,
They are the most enduring".

A border of engraved lace often edged these early Valentines, until some enterprising merchant discovered that a most creditable lace could be cut forth from paper. The commercial Valentine greeting became the accepted sugar sprinkling on the thorny path of love.

Proper young Victorian ladies, stringently chaperoned against the too bold advances of their suitors, thrilled to receive such extravagance of passion on the bon-bon prettiness of a Valentine. Many a marriage was made by their match-making virtuosity.

Another type of Valentine, that originated in Europe, was the pull-out.
This three-dimensional creation gained much popularity, for the numerous golden bower, heavily rose-laden, the large quota of pouting Cupids and the amorous profusion of color gave the ardent lover a lot for his money.

Valentines today are not as florid­ ly unabashed as they were in the time when Grandpapa wooed Grandmama.
But the spun-sugar appeal of the old-fashioned ones endures through the years. Mr. R. H. Potter, an outstanding collector of old Valentines, lent the quaint examples shown on these pages.

LOOKING AROUND

FROSTY February may be fleeting as an icicle but it’s Winter’s favorite month for new shows in the museums, shops and galleries. Here’s news of a few exhibits worthy of your hour-rationed days.

MUSEUMS ARE FASHION CONSCIOUS

New high in light adornment at the Museum of Modern Art is a ceiling light shaded with a boned corset! The amusing exhibition, “Are Clothes Modern?”, takes some wizard pokes at fashions past and current. Its unique approach of looking at clothing regardless of convention or tradition is entertainment plus, but rest assured it advocates no specific dress reform.

Architect Bernard Rudofsky, who arranged the show, suggests sandals are sufficient for inside footwear when floors are panel heated, recommends reclining while dining—Roman fashion—and even points out the advantages of bumpy floors. This show will be on until March 4—and be sure to take the man who always complains about your funny hats. Museum hours: daily 12 to 7, Sundays 1 to 7.

Before Christmas the Metropolitan Museum of Art announced that the Costume Museum had come under its esoteric wing.

The 7000 articles of dress, some three centuries old, from the Costume Museum’s Laboratory will eventually be combined with the Metropolitan’s own vast collection when their post-war building plans are realized. In the meantime, special fashion exhibitions will continue at the present quarters of the Costume Museum, 18 East 50th Street.

In March the Metropolitan Museum will open the exhibition, “American Dress and Dress Fabrics,” so jot this down on your calendar as a future-must. Special exhibitions during February: 16th Century French prints, also lush silk and satin brocades, damasks and brocatelles—European Textiles from the 16th to the early 20th centuries. Museum hours: daily 10 to 5, Sundays 1 to 6.

Like a horn of plenty, the Brooklyn Museum’s shows are varied this month, so toss a coin as to which one to start on first.

Perhaps the most outstanding is the collection of paintings and drawings by José Maria Velasco, distinguished Mexican artist. On until Feb. 25th.

Though the subtle symbolism which is the essence of Chinese art and decoration may remain a mystery to the uninitiated, anyone can appreciate the exotic beauty of the Chinese Ceramics now on view. Rare vessels of the Sung dynasty, golden age of Chinese art, as well as examples of the Tang (618-906) and earlier periods are there to be seen until Feb. 4th. Museum hours: daily 10 to 5, Sundays 1 to 6.

native ideas. Seven new rooms have been arranged to include all the cheerful creature comforts and decorative delights the returning service man and woman expects to find at home.

You'll see a handsome 18th century living room with one end wall devoted to a huge picture window conservatory filled with tropical plants; a barn-red and pine-paneled bedroom with lots of deep built-in bookshelves framed with joist-like vertical beams. The fireplace is flanked with shelves roomy enough to display trophies of war. An early Amish postoffice desk offers plenty of cupboard and drawer space as well as elbow room for writing.

Guatemalan fabrics in heady colors, purple and fuchsia plaid, jade striped with peppermint pink are used with striking effect in another yellow living room. There's lots to see, so just go in and look around.

The five sleek rooms at B. Altman & Co. offer no quandaries as to price, for the complete cost of each room is clearly marked, from $1000 to $5000. We show some views on pages 58 and 59 of this issue.

Decorator touches worth remembering: draped swag wall-paper for a formal foyer, a ruby glass finial perched on a white balustered stair rail, and scarlet painted chests with chalk-white hardware.

A stroll through the 13 States Shop at W. & J. Sloane reminds you of a charming wayside inn somewhere in the Berkshires, for it's chock full of Early American glass and china, old pine and maple, Colonial "kivers" and hooked rugs.

Customers like the floor plan of the two-story house at Sloane's so much they want to reproduce it exactly. Nice additions to the Sloane House this year are the mammoth bath-dressing rooms with plenty of closet space, and ceiling-tall mirrors. Special favorite is the one papered in silver with a design of forest green unicorns leaping rampant through clouds of powdery snow crystals.

Nice-to-come-home-to colors for a den are Chinese blue walls, pine paneled fire-place with Delft tile surround, muted Oriental rug, and soft blue and yellow print on Victorian love seat with matching draperies.

Here's why many-layer KIMSUL® is better insulation—easier to install Kimsul is the only insulation with many-layer construction. Unlike loose, bulk insulation, KIMSUL® is prefabricated. Stitched together, the many layers form a blanket of uniform thickness from end to end. Thus, KIMSUL assures you the same insulation today, and years from now.

Anyone who can handle a hammer can install clean, penny-light KIMSUL. It's made to order for applying between attic floor joists or between beams of the sloping roof.

Selection of KIMSUL for the U.S. Navy Quonset Huts—the world's largest prefabricated housing project—assures you the same insulation always—many other features that are sold generally throughout the country are credited in the magazine to the manufacturers.

KIMSULATED. The Ritchies installed KIMSUL —sure. Tom put it in the attic himself, and instead of burning 12 tons of coal, they burn only 8 tons. Yes, the same savings may be had with any fuel. So obey that thrifty impulse—install KIMSUL insulation right away.

IT'S ANTELOPE!

On the epicure's reaction to the chase and on how to cook one of America's rarest game meats

The other night I dined with the Bears. These good people are renowned for their ability to find out-of-the-way recipes and unusual dishes therewith to titillate the palate and the imagination of their guests. Dining with them proves no mere alimentary exercise—for each dish has a well-documented background, a personal history of its own. For Mr. Bear is knowledgeable on gustatory subjects ranging from antipasto to zwieback. So it was with a cheerful disposition and pleasant expectations that I sat me down to my luncheon.

As the soup was served forth, Mr. Bear claimed the attention of the table at large. "It's amazing," quoth he, "how much of the primitive hunter lurks in even the most fastidious gourmet. Consider this turtle soup, of such an exquisite flavor that only a dash of sherry is warranted. Do we not instantly savor it more lingeringly, more appreciatively, the selfsame instant we learn that a friend well-known to us all hauled the original turtle from her Caribbean depths? Indeed, it is the thought of the tussle, the triumph of man over beast, that adds zest to the eating. The man who goes out and hunts his own fare, who hears it honked on his doorstep (I speak figuratively, of course) to be prepared in his own pot by his own hearth, knows tenfold the delights of the table.

"There's still a bit of the Daniel Boone in the epicure who demands his Russian caviar par excellence, his pâté de foie gras bedecked with truffles to his taste. For does not that same gentleman relish wholeheartedly a choicely prepared hare, the fine flavor of venison, the pleasures of wild duck, the backwoods delights of bear ragout?"

We sagely nodded agreement, and leaned back well content, trusting that mine host's discourse would have bearing on dishes yet to come. With interested expectancy we eyed the roast as the butler bore it in.

"Friends," resumed our host, "I see by the sparkle in your eyes that my brief remarks have aroused your curiosity. Indeed, it seems hardly possible to you that this could be a mere tame shoulder of lamb, as indeed it seems. For if it were, my appeal to the Nimrod in the confirmed diner-out would have indeed been in vain. May I assure you straightway that only a fortnight ago this cut of meat roamed our native mountains, as wild as in Indian times.

THESE ARE THE WESTERN PINES
In sunny Andalusia 700 years ago...

As far back as the 13th century, the vineyards of the Merito family were already producing wines of extraordinary quality. For seven hundred years the art of making these fine wines has been handed down in this family. Today, too, superb Merito Sherries and Ports are shipped from the same historic vineyards in Spain and others in Portugal, by the present Marques del Merito. Taste them. You will appreciate instantly that they belong in the tradition of great wines.

Each Merito label carries helpful information on taste, color and use. Look for the distinctive Merito label the next time you buy wine.

For this is our true American antelope, which naturalists claim is an intermediate between deer and the domesticated cattle. Be that as it may, of more immediate interest is the fact that a cousin of my wife shot it on his Wyoming ranch and shipped it to us by Railway Express. On tasting this unusual meat I think that a paraphrase from worthy Br'er Fox may pass through your minds—"It looks like venison, it smells like venison, it tastes like venison—but jeeper creepers, I'm blessed if it ain't antelope!"

On eagerly picking up knife and fork the comparison with venison struck me as valid, but to my mind the antelope proved a finer-grained, tenderer meat, which melted in the mouth in a most disarming way. After dinner I sought the opportunity to question Mr. Bear about the preparation of this native treat—unknown to my Eastern palate. He, in turn, referred me to his wife, to whom all credit for the culinary art should be given. Here is what I gathered from her.

On its arrival the antelope was found to be well hung (Antelope meat must never be frozen, as this impairs the flavor and tenderness.) First of all the musky parts were removed by wiping with a damp cloth. Afraid that it wouldn't keep in a city icebox Mrs. Bear put the meat to work in cider vinegar, with a couple of cups of red wine thrown in for good measure, along with a sliced large onion, two bay-leaves, three peppercorns, two whole cloves, a dash of salt, so that the whole completely covered the meat. She then popped it in the refrigerator and left it for five days—or until the time for the dinner party.

This particular cut was a shoulder, with a flat bone. Bearing this in mind, Mrs. Bear removed it from the marinating stock, dried it and put it in a sizzling hot roasting pan with no seasoning. In a broiling oven it was done in about three quarters of an hour. When done it should be red in the center and crisp on the outside. After taking the meat out of the pan she added flour to the pan gravy, and then sour cream, until she got a sauce of the desired consistency. She warned that it should be spooned very slowly over a slow flame so that it wouldn't curdle.

To serve with—her suggestion was red cabbage and boiled potatoes, with grape or elderberry jelly. For wine, burgundy is a good choice. Ripe green olives are a piquant accent with antelope meat.

Further conversation brought out other excellent ways of preparing different cuts of antelope (all can be adapted to venison, too). Antelope (Continued on page 106)

CROPS FOR WINTER FUN

Popcorn, peanuts and gourds are easy to grow, will prove sources of entertainment next winter.

Whenever there are children in a family, war-time gardeners should include a few crops for fun as well as profit in their 1945 plantings. Among these, popcorn, peanuts and gourds are easy to grow, will prove sources of entertainment next winter.

Among these, popcorn, peanuts and gourds are easy to grow, will prove sources of entertainment next winter. Each one limited space and effort bring large returns and the garden pleasure is carried over into the winter season when fruits of stalk and line offer a variety of entertainment for quiet evenings by the hearth. We don’t have to explain the uses of popcorn and peanuts, but fewer persons know that gourds can be fashioned into an almost infinite number of useful and ornamental articles by the ingenious artisan.

Popcorn

Popcorn can be raised in any part of the country where sweet corn is planted. It requires the same kind of growing conditions, well-drained soil, sunshine and moderate moisture. Since the long ripening season is necessary to bring ears to maturity, popcorn is planted at the time when early sweet corn is sown.

Spade the soil deeply and work in 50 pounds of commercial fertilizer to 1,000 square feet of area. Mark your row with a taut string. Along this make a shallow furrow not more than an inch deep. Then drop three or four kernels at intervals of approximately fifteen inches in the row and cover with the warm earth. We don’t have to explain the uses of popcorn and peanuts, but fewer persons know that gourds can be fashioned into an almost infinite number of useful and ornamental articles by the ingenious artisan.

Corn is best popped over an open fire and eaten with salt and crisp apples. Just as delicious results are obtained, however, with an electric popper or by the use of a covered frying (Continued on page 104) pan kept in agitation over a gas flame.

Children love popcorn balls and caramel corn and they enjoy stringing the fluffy kernels for use on the Christmas tree. Here is a recipe for making balls:

1 cup sugar
1/2 cup white corn syrup
1/2 cup water
4 cup butter substitute
2 teaspoon salt
2 teaspoon vanilla

Put all ingredients except the vanilla into a saucepan and cook, stirring until sugar is dissolved. Then continue cooking until the syrup forms a brittle ball in cold water. Add the vanilla and stir enough to mix. Drop three quarts of unseasoned popcorn into the mixture and stir until each kernel is coated. Then shape the corn into balls with your fingers. It is sticky enough to cling together.

You can make popcorn balls, baskets, boys and animals instead of balls if the fancy strikes you.

Popcorn may also be eaten with cream and sugar as a cereal, or it may be served hot garnished cream of tomato soup. Other recipes include cheese snacks, chocolate popcorn and popcorn fudge.

Peanuts

The peanut is a curious plant and many gardeners raise it for that reason. The vines are tender, but are frequently found in gardens as far north as Massachusetts and Michigan. Fundamental requirements are the same for corn, allowing the peanut 100 to 150 frostless days to reach maturity.

The soil should be prepared and fertilized as for other vegetable crops. Raw peanuts are shelled, with care not to break the brown skin coating on the seed, and these are stored not more than an inch deep after frost danger is over. Peanuts of the Spanish type, whose plants are small, are grown at four inch intervals in rows two feet apart. The larger types require more space.

Throughout the season, shallow cultivation is important, for it favors the female flowers set earthward a kind of elongated spike that punctures the loose soil. On the the seedpods, or peanuts, develop.

Peanuts are harvested when the nuts are mature but before frost has killed the vines. The easiest way to judge maturity is to dig up a few pods and open them. If the peas are firm and the shell begins to show dark veins inside, it is time to pull the vines. After this the nuts remain on the plants for two or three weeks until the foliage is dry. Then they are broken off and spread out until the shells dry.

before storing in a warm, dry place.

Besides their nutritive value, peanuts are a delicious addition to meat substitute loaves, salads and cakes. It is also fun to see what kinds of animals and figures youngsters can make with a few peanuts, some wire and toothpicks.

Gourds

Another plant with a lot of garden interest is the gourd. Whether or not you can grow your own materials for birdhouses, Christmas decorations, dippers and a thousand and one other things, depends upon the section of the country in which you live. Some gourds can doubtless be grown to maturity in your locality, but it is wise to find out from your Experiment Station the names of varieties that do well before ordering seed. It is also wise for beginners to raise hard-shelled types such as the colorful Cucurbita pepo var. anisfera and the larger, not so bright, Lagenarias, because these are easier to care for and to keep.

Gourds need a four- to five-month growing season without frost, plenty of sun and protection from strong winds. The soil should be well drained, fertile and abundantly supplied with organic matter. It should be spaded and worked to a depth of ten inches.

Seeds can be started outdoors when the soil is thoroughly warm. Hills are set six to eight feet apart and eight seeds are planted under less than an inch of earth in each place. If more than three vines survive in one hill, the weak ones are pulled up later in the season and discarded.

For those who must give gourds a headstart indoors, the easiest method is to sow about eight seeds in a pot, from three to six weeks before outdoor planting time. When the weather is warm and gray, water the gourds and transplant the entire contents of the pot, earth and vines, without disturbing the roots. Work a tablespoon of garden fertilizer into the hill and water the ground again. When the plants are thoroughly established, thin them to three in a hill. Vines grow fast and will form a ground cover or climb a trellis in short order. Meanwhile the gardener's work is to keep down weeds and to see that the soil about the vines gets soaked with water once a week if the early part of the season is dry.

Gourds are tender annuals but the hard-shelled varieties can remain on the vines after frost without injury. The test of maturity is to press the finger nail into the skin. If the coat is hard enough to resist, the gourd is ready. Lagenarias are mature when fruits and stems turn a light brown color. It is a good idea to leave two to four inches of stem when gourds are cut from the vine.

Like vegetables for storage, gourds must be perfect and handled with care if they are to be kept. Curing takes several weeks in a light, warm place where the fruits may be laid out and turned over occasionally to prevent mold. After they are dried, the fun begins.

Small, colorful gourds, waxed or shellacked, make cheerful Christmas ornaments. They are often piled in a basket for table decoration, or cut open and cleaned for use as ash trays or boxes. Wrens will build nests in larger gourds from which the stem and core have been removed.

Before starting work, however, the gourd must be washed clean and dried with a soft cloth. If it is to be hung up, a hole is burned in the end with a hot wire. All cutting and gluing of legs and handles should be done before decoration begins. Edges, inside surfaces or outer roughness may be smoothed down with pumice or fine sandpaper. After these preliminaries, the gourd may be decorated with enamel paint, or simply treated with water wax to preserve their natural beauty.

There is no end to the uses of gourds and their presence in the garden is a challenge to the ingenious hand-worker.

steak, which is fine in texture like venison, should be cooked in much the same way. Brush with olive oil and put on a broiling grill for from twelve to fifteen minutes, depending on the thickness of the meat. For added flavor and tenderness, marinate the steak for an hour or so in a French dressing of oil and vinegar. When done, serve with lemon butter, and chopped parsley. Or serve with mushroom sauce, as you would beef steak.

Antelope cutlets, cut from the loin about half to three quarters of an inch thick, are delicious. Marinate them in French dressing for an hour, remove, drain and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Then powder with flour, dip in a slightly beaten egg and roll in bread-crumbs. Sauté quickly in butter eight to ten minutes, turning frequently. When done, add half a cup of currant jelly to the drippings, stir and bring to a boil before pouring over the cutlets. These cutlets are excellent also with apples fried in butter and sprinkled with sugar and lemon juice.

And, above all, remember not to overcook antelope, as this tends to toughen it.

BOOK REVIEWS

KITCHENS NEAR AND FAR, by Herman Smith, M. Barrows Co., New York. $2.00

Readers who cherish "Stina, the Story of a Cook" will want "Kitchens Near and Far" as a companion volume on their shelves. Stina herself is no more but her memory lingers on in this new book by Herman Smith—as does that of a number of other memorable cook-philosophers.

"Kitchens" is no book to turn to at the last moment for a quickly-assembled menu or inspiration for a main dish. Recipes there are, to be sure, in plentiful supply but they are incidental to the main theme—the recollection in tranquility of emotions (gustatory and otherwise) of the author's youth and young manhood.

It is a book to be dipped into at leisure, in nostalgic mood. The first section recalls Autumn festivals on a Michigan farm, with appropriate recipes for cooking game and turkey. Then comes Winter with its prodigious post-skating feasts and an amusing account of a Leap Year Ball organized by the giggling Misses of the neighborhood. Most of the culinary bows in this part go to Sister Louisa.

In subsequent sections the author starts on his travels, first to Chicago, then to his brother's ranch in the Far West. John, the Chinese cook, was no Stina but he had his moments. His plum pickle sounds delicious and his trick of adding half the white of an egg to the water with which he mixed his pie crust apparently worked wonders.

The last half of the book describes a world cruise as seen through the eyes of a romantic young man. Everywhere he went—Hawaii, China, Manila, Ceylon and back by way of Italy and Spain he hobnobbed with chefs, tried the food for which each country was famous and picked up recipes and tips. But his eyes were not always on the table nor his nose in the kitchen.

There was his first sight of Diamond Head. There was the Filipino Fair and the dancer "like a burst of flame". There were his conversations with a Buddhist priest in Ceylon—and the magic moment on the Suez Canal when, as his ship slid by another in the moonlight, he touched fingers in silence across the intervening space with an unknown girl.

Frankly sentimental, "Kitchens Near and Far" will appeal alike to sentimentalists and to lovers of good and cosmopolitan cooking.

This handy, pocket-size manual will prove a boon to those who like their drinks mixed and their recipes easy to find. Mr. Gaige, also author of "Cocktail Guide and Ladies' Companion", knows his liquors and all that goes with them.

The actual cocktail recipes are grouped according to the main ingredient, be it gin, bourbon, rye, scotch, applejack, rum, vodka, wine or (Continued on page 120)

SEEDLINGS IN SAND

By K. Palmer Plumb, formerly with the New Haven Experiment Station, now a practical home gardener.

EVER since the days when "Adam delved and Eve span", true gardeners have wanted to start their own plants from seed. Given a sunny window, pots, soil and good seed, there should be no difficulty in satisfying this pre-Spring garden urge and in obtaining a nice lot of sturdy seedlings for earliest outdoor use. In practice, however, it is only the lucky amateur who gets a half-dozen good plants from a packet of seed. The rest of the seedlings damp off, that is, they succumb to a disease whose causal fungus is commonly found in soil.

One easy way to get around this discouraging experience is to use sand instead of soil for the planting medium. Clean sand contains no damping-off fungi. It is neat for indoor use and it brings results with small effort.

For sand culture use shallow pots, cans or boxes, sand of a coarse grade, a small amount of any balanced fertilizer such as 3-8-7, seed and water. Ideal containers are about four to seven inches deep and provided with some kind of drainage system. Clay pots serve best when given a coat of rain or shellac to prevent loss of nutrients through the porous walls. A few pebbles or pieces of broken pot over the hole will keep the sand from washing out of the bottom. All containers should be thoroughly cleaned before use, especially if they have held soil previously.

Any kind of sand will do for this work although the coarser grades are preferred. In most cases sand can be used just as it comes from buildingsupply house or shore. Our own source is the children's sand box. If the sand is taken from an inland pit and contains a good deal of soil or decayed material, it can be washed with little trouble. For a small amount the simplest method is to put the sand in a pan, pour hot water over it, stir and throw off the residue. Then repeat the process till run off is relatively clear.

Whether you wash the sand or not it should be moistened throughout its depth before planting. Pots are filled with the damp sand, seeds sown as in garden seedling—dill cell pages in our 1945 edition of "Gardening Illustrated," 500 pages with full-color pictures of the newest flowers and the most beautiful older ones. SEELDINGS IN SAND the heaviest sifting of sand over it.

From now on the work of the gardener is to provide sunshine, water and food for his cultures. After the plants come up, they should be given as much sunlight as possible. Sand can be kept from drying out by pots are set in a sacree that is filled with water every other day. The sand will take up what it needs and there will be no danger of washing nutrients from the roots. On the other hand, fertilizer is applied from the top so that it reaches the roots immediately. In case surface watering is necessary, if flats are used for example, it is best to feed plants immediately after watering.

A satisfactory nutrient may be made by stirring one and one-half level
spoonfuls of a complete fertilizer—3-8-7, 5-10-5 or 4-12-4—into a quart of water. The food elements dissolve and become available in the sand. The amount is approximately one pint per thousand square feet. If the ininsule portion is quite harmless and is spread evenly over the sand up to an inch deep, it will take. The exact amount is not important, but in Hats season, after transplanting, there should be protection from the sun.

In the matter of feeding, the gardener has a chance to make some experiments on his own. One or two meals a week should be enough to produce good growth in any plants. However, when seedlings, such as cabbage and cauliflower, have a tendency to make stems that are too long, compact growth may be induced by withholding food until a week or ten days after sprouts appear. At the other extreme, tiny seedlings containing little for the new plant to draw on, may benefit if nutrient solution is added to the sand at the time of planting, about a cupful to a quart.
Most seedlings, however, do well if food is given after germination.

Seedlings started in sand develop remarkably strong roots and are very easily transplanted. When they reach the handling size, they should be transplanted into soil or fresh pots of sand where each plant will have room for development. Pots or flats are made ready in advance. The gardener takes up a clump of seedlings and places them in a dish of water. Immediately the sand begins to wash away from the roots making it very easy to take plant after plant and set it in its new spot. As usual, after transplanting, there should be protection from the sun.

Feeding continues for those transplanted into sand, unless, for some reason, the gardener chooses to arrest growth. In this case, perhaps because of a late outdoor season or because tests in northern sections of the country. All reports are very favorable.

FANTASIA is a new, yellow bedding variety which, although a Hybrid Tea, could be classed among the Floribundas because of the profusion of bloom. At times during the season there will be six to eight medium-size flowers on a single stem. The buds are sleek and of vibrant, golden color, opening to a soft, creamy yellow. The fragrance is of wild rose. Fantasia gives a refreshing "pick-up" to the garden and keeps very well when cut.

SHINING STAR is a luminous, yellow Hybrid Tea. At times there is a faint blush of pink at the edges of the petals and the buds show streaks of carmine. The flower is full, open and lovely formed. The deep yellow color lasts well during intense Summer heat.

CLIMBING BREAK O'DAY is the latest Hybrid Tea Climbing rose to be offered. The blooms, of course, resemble those of the bush type but in many cases are larger and of slightly deeper color. The plant breaks well at the base, develops most vigorously and seems to offer great possibilities for hardiness. Bloom is heavy early in the season; is borne singly and in clusters over a long period, recurring if the plant is satisfied in its environment. Foliage is beautiful dark green of heavy substance and very disease-resistant. This is the first break in a Climbing Hybrid Tea of wichurana strain — its significance to the rose world will be observed with great interest.

GOLDEN LION, the newest Pillar-type Climbing rose, grows to a height of eight to ten feet. Flowers are golden yellow, deeper in shade than those of Doublelooms. Resistant to disease because of its Rose setigera parentage, it has light green, shiny foliage.

seed has been started a bit early, food is withheld. The plants continue to thrive on a diet of water although little growth results.

When transplanting directly from sand pots into the garden, it is important to keep the seedlings watered and protected from the sun for a few days until they become acclimated. Without this precaution, the young plants will wilt quickly.

Of course, many vegetables and flowers can be brought to maturity in sand culture, if the gardener has a place for the work and an experimental sand culture, if the gardener has a place for the work and an experimental
PERENNIALS

Most perennial borders will benefit by a firm taking-in-hand. Neglected in these days of vegetable gardening, they have become crowded and weedy. Sturdy specimens that have survived neglect and filled spaces left vacant by more delicate neighbors result in monotonous repetition.

Remaking the border, or even a substantial section of it, may be impossible this spring. But a start can be made toward something better by supplanting a few old varieties with some really choice material that can be enjoyed this season and will increase to form dividable clumps at replanting time a year or two hence.

We weren't going to mention continuous bloom because that's well-nigh impossible in a border narrower than eight or ten feet. But several long-season bloomers like coreopsis and feverfew do their best to achieve it. If you shunned these old faithfuls in the past because they were coarse or harsh in color, just take some of the current coreopsis catalogues and run up on newer varieties that possess the old persistence but have the outward appearance of aristocracy—happy combination toward which many plant breeders are aiming.

The old weedy Coreopsis grandiflora can be replaced by Mayfield Giant, with larger and more profuse golden flowers that are at their peak in late June and July but give color into October. About the same height and daintier in every respect is Variety Golden Shower that also blooms until frost. Not new, but worthy of wider use, is threadleaf coreopsis (C. verticillata), 9" dwarf with starry, deep-yellow flowers in Summer and into September.

Sturdily, long-blooming shasta daisy (Chrysanthemum maximum), being white, will fit into any color scheme. Its high-tide of bloom in late June and July is being extended and its flowers glorified. Variety Mount Shasta might be mistaken for a chrysanthemum, so fully double and frilled are its flowers; they appear from late Spring until frost on vigorous plants 2' tall. Daintier and smaller, about 1½' tall, is the double Chiffon. Earliest of All, a 2' single, is truly earliest of all.

Among long-blooming, daisy-like flowers there is considerable choice. Besides coreopsis and shasta daisy, we have the rudbeckias and gaillardias, their varieties legion. In the newer gaillardias, all of which are drought-resistant and prefer a light soil, we find good self colors in brilliant Ruby, in Golden Goddess and in Mr. Sherbrooke, also gold. Combinations of colors are found in Giant, orange, yellow and red, and in the more compact, honey-crimson-limp and Goblin, bright yellow with deep wine stripe. Coreopsis, too, are found in a wider color range. There is no trace of washed-out magenta in rudbeckia King, deep crimson red, or in White Pine, with pure white with cone of metallic lustre.

Several yellow sun-lovers are available in refined varieties. Evening primroses Illumination and Yellow River both have large blooms from June to Fall. Their neat growth and (Continued on page 112)

Useful in the border to cover up dead stalks of early bloomers and to make a background, perennial sweet pea (not sweet-scented) is represented by White Pearl. Giving a cool but colorful effect is Salvia sclarea Vatican, a meadow sage having showy whorls of lavender, pink and white. Subsequent flowers above woody, silvery green foliage. Caucasian scabiosa comes in pale or strong colors: Blue Snowflake is cool looking when mid-summer temperatures soar; Isaac House, a soft mauve; Blue Lady, azure blue on a plant that is very hardy. For a brilliant touch in the sunny border there are several improved petunia varieties. Firebird is ruby crimson with an overlay of orange sheen, Cherry Glow is another, and Garnet, spreading in habit, is the first of a new strain of hardy, large-flowered petunias.

LONG-BLOOMING EDGING PLANTS are of extreme value in the perennial border. Some of the violas and diascias are among the best. To several hybridists' hands. fulfilling our client's wish for an abundance of color in flower and foliage. We decided that the long borders of the upper garden should be in continuous bloom while the lower garden should be evergreen with seasonal fillips of color. Pink dogwood in the Spring, its rusky foliage in the Fall, lilies among the laurel and andromeda, and water-lilies assure color for many weeks.

In the upper garden Spring begins with daffodils, narcissus and tulips followed by tulips and bleeding heart, which are particularly effective with the pink dogwood of the little pool garden. Then come irises, delphiniums.

To obtain an immediate effect the first year, we made space in the perennial borders for enough annuals to assure Summer bloom. This was so successful that the scheme has been kept up, the annuals being put in the places left after the Spring bulbs have gone by. Marigold Yellow Supreme and Mealy cup Sage (S. farinacea) Blue Bedder, calceolaria, French Heliotrope, fuchsia and purple and white petunias are the Summer mainstays, Michaelmas daisies and a few chrysanthemums carry the garden to frost. The color of Autumn foliage is counted upon for late effect.

The hedge of the garden is Dwarf Winged Eumonymus whose maroon foliage is picked up by the dogwood in the lower garden. An untrimmed hedge of Redleaf Japanese Barberry marks off the wide North lawn from the meadow. Its purplish red is especially effective in the Fall when the meadow is tawny and blue with Autumn grasses and asters.

Though the effect of the perennial borders is one of a great bouquet of flowers just thrown together there is a formal design underlying its profusion. Important points in the plan, such as corners and entrances, are accented by flowering trees or shrubs or by perennials of long seasonal effect. These include dogwoods, Fragrant Viburnum, Rose Daphne, and Hardy Candytuff. Then through the length of the beds a rhythm is established by evenly spaced clumps of iris. The tall plants at the back of the bed, the middle sized ones in the center and the low ones at the edge are further evidence of the formal pattern.

The color scheme runs lavishly through pinks, blues and yellows with a good deal of white. In making color effective in a perennial border enough plants of each variety must be used—therefore the number of kinds of flowers in the garden must be restricted. In this instance peonies were relegated to their own border outside because they would take up too much space in view of their rather brief blooming period.

While color is high in the sunny borders the main garden has a shady spot where the maple tree dominates one quadrant of the garden. Here the ferns,甜蜜, astilbes Fringed Bleeding heart cover the ground.

Color there is aplenty in the Schmettau garden—and serenity, born of horizontal lines against a backdrop of open country. (Continued on page 114)

be well-behaved plants darker than the type. Another blue-flowered, shade-tolerant plant, platycodon or balloon-flower, is available in dwarf form with deep pacific-blue flowers, known as P. periclymenum, and also in pure white, P. grandiflorum album, to 2½" tall.

Gardensmen years back recognized the value of coralbells in light shade as well as full sun. Varieties now range from fiery red Philé de Feu, through coral-pink Rosamundi and Oakington Jewel and pale pink La Perle, to purest Snowflake. The pink, all-Summer-blooming Pacific bleeding-heart, Dicentra formosa, is also represented by a white variety named Sweetheart.

To combine with tulips

In Spring we look for good edgers and for flowers to combine with bulbs. More compact than evergreen candy-tuft is its 1-½" variety Snowflake, having flowers three times larger than the species completely covering the plant. Little Gem is a floriferous dwarf only 6-8" tall. For the foreground in shade there are primroses in several fine strains such as the Missouri and Mrs. Carder; and also epimediums in delicate colors such as Niveum, white; Violaceum, lilac; Elegans, pale yellow and Sulphureum, sulphur yellow. At its best in full sun is Phlox nervis Camia, neat 8-incher with pure pink blooms in May and June. And there are moss phlox varieties by the dozen.

Tolerant of either sun or partial shade, yellow-daisy-like doronicums and blue pheonakens are happy companions for primroses, tulips and many another Spring border plant. The newer Mme. Mason’s heart-shaped leaves are more compact in growth and its yellow flowers larger than the species. Doronicum magnificum, white, bright downy leopardbane, D. clusi, is a 9" dwarf. Pheonaken Blue Pearl, one of the newest Jacob’s-ladders, has medium blue, airy heads, while creeping pheonaken Royal Blue is bright blue and compact, about 1" tall.

A little later, but overlapping the early bloomers, are the geraniums, with several new varieties ranging from yellow to brilliant red. Red Wings aptly describes a brilliant semi-double with yellow anthers; Wilton Ruby is a double ruby-red, much like Fire Opal. Globe-flowers in such varieties as Lemon Queen, Golden Queen, Orange Globe and Sussex Queen, pick up the strong yellows and oranges.

And into early Summer

surge of bloom in early Summer. Pyrethrum is one of the late Spring-early Summer offerings which gives a choice of a varied group in almost all shades of pink or white and of named varieties such as Robinson's Dark Crimson.

Fine blues are available for this period in veronicas, campanulas, aclenities and the tough little lilies. Center Blue Lake is a new variety of that spire-flowered and excellent mixer spire speedwell, Veronica spicata; P. amethystina is represented by variety Royal Blue. Sparks is the darkest blue monkshood; it reaches 2½' and prefers a shady spot. Bright blue-flowered and white-flowered––are Brookbank and Brondlelfed Bulges; Ajuga reptans Pink Spire adds another hue to the usually blue bulges.

Campanulas or bellflowers range in height from a half-foot to over four feet and flower from May to late July, sometimes with gatherings of bloom to Fall. Among newer varieties are Carpathian bellflower Blue Carpet, 5½', peachleaf bellflowers Misty Morn, a lavender-blue double 2½' tall, Tellam Beauty, rich blue 2½'-3' and Pride of Exmoor, 3½'-4', and Olymphy bellflower Six Hills Giant, pale lavender-blue single 2½'–3'.

Astibles are damp shade-lovers that have been much improved in recent years. The new Fanal, with deep garnet flowers and red-flushed foliage, red William Reeves, silvery pink Gertrude Birt, clear rose Gloria Suprema, Peachtree Blossom and white Betsy Cy­ perus being among the best. Other valuable additions for mid-Summer in the shade are the several species of hosta, or funkia, the thalictrums and the old-fashioned gasplant or burning-bush.

Strong colors of late Summer and Fall call for good mixers. One of the best is the new anemones Moonlight, whose pale lemon blooms and gray-green foliage serve to blend bright flowers. Achillea ptarmica Snowball has pure white flowers, fuller and more perfect than older varieties, on a bushy 2' plant, and Achillea tagetese, pale yellow flowers in profusion. Babys-breath, Bishop's Fairy, with panicles of pure white double flowers on 3½' plants, has long been a favorite; for with white double flowers, Rosy Veil, described as decidedly pink. Ideal blenders for dry sunny borders is laven­der flowered ground ivy; nepeta Blue Beauty is one of the newer upright varieties, compact and about 2½' tall; Six Hills Giant is about half the size.

Mulleins come in pale as well as bright colors. Mullein flowered and bronze-foliaged are Brockbank and 4½' tall. Eight Hills Giant is about half the size.

Colors varying from white through lavenders and pinks to purples are now found in buddleias, tender shrubs usually treated as background perennials in northern states. This season two new varieties are available. Peace has handsome 1½'-white spikes on 5½'-stems. A seedling of Fortune, popular lilac variety, it makes a satisfactory cut flower and is especially attractive in combination with gladiolus. The new Purple Prince, about the same height, has a brilliant flower that sparkles with a large orange eye.

Tritomas for accent

Nothing will give more punch to a Summer border than a group of tritomas or red-hot-pokers, glowing in color and striking in form. Hybridizers have met the current demand for these plants with several fine varieties: coral-red and ivory Springtime, White Fairy, Primrose Beauty and orange-suffused Calipini.

Catananche Giant Copiap's Dart, with violet-blue, cornflower-like flowers on silvery foliage, is a contrast in itself. Blooming in late Summer and through Fall, Stokes' aster or Stokesia, with flower of similar form, is represented by a good light shade in Blue Moon.

Several sturdy perennials provide height in late Summer. Heleniums Riverton Yellow and Riverton Gem, crimson-brown, will reach 5'; Helenium peregrinum, with gold-edged, dark mahogany flowers, grows to 3'. There are also the perennial sunflowers, helianthus Soliel d'Or, with double, rich yellow, dahlia-like flowers, and orange sunflower, heliopsis Summer Gold, new daisy-like semi-double.

If a tall red-purple can be included in the color scheme, there is the 6'-gayfeather September Glory, whose flowers come into bloom at the same time all along the giant spikes. White Spire is a lattis whose color may give it wider use than the red types. Improvements in purple loosestrife are The Beacon, with crimson flowers on 3½'-4' spikes from July to frost, and Prolific, a good rose, 2½' tall.

Among the shade lovers we find late bloom in the mnrue Wilson variety of azure monsheld, Aconitum fischeri, and in several fine Japanese anemones, such as white semi-dwarf Marie Machard and Whirlwind, and silvery-pink September Charm.

This summary makes no mention of iris, chrysanthemum, fall aster, gardens in northern states. This season improvements in purple loosestrife are The Beacon, with crimson flowers on 3½'-4' spikes from July to frost, and Prolific, a good rose, 2½' tall. The new Purple Prince, about the same height, has a brilliant flower that sparkles with a large orange eye.

Dorothy S. Towie, of the University of New Hampshire, recommends them for small gardens respectable cherries come.

A short time ago a bewildered gardener asked Professor Albert F. Yeager who has done some outstanding work in plant breeding in the Agriculturtural Experiment Station at the University of New Hampshire, about the bush cherries which are being tested in the University gardens. "Can they be eaten?" he asked. "Sure they're edible," Dr. Yeager replied. "But lots of people say they aren't good to eat because they don't taste like a cherry. Why should they? They are a different fruit. But they can be eaten off the bush if you have a good variety, and you soon develop a taste for them. You know people not too long ago thought tomatoes were poisonous, and had to be sold the idea that they are good to eat. More recently we've been developing a national taste for avocados, whose flavor, like that of olives, is a definitely acquired taste."

Whether or not we settle the ques­tion of whether a cherry not a cherry, bush cherries do answer one demand of the small home owner, particularly the city dweller. They are ideal shrubs for the small city lot whose owner wants an ornamental shrub with edible fruit. They are a "thing of beauty" and useful at the same time.

There are two species of bush cherries, the Nanking and the Korean. The Nanking or Manchu (P. tomentosa) is a large shrub which ordinarily grows from four to six feet high, and may grow as high as ten feet. It produces some fruit the second year, and a good crop the third year. The fruit grows along the branches in zopes of translucent red, light in color, varying slightly in size, but of good quality. There are yellow and white specimens, too.

The Nanking is nearer a sour cherry than a sweet one in flavor, bear­ing early in the year at the regular cherry season—in New England in July. It is more nearly related to orna­ment shrubs than to fruit trees, the blossom and bush resembling the dou-

Don’t get hooked again!

Only yesterday (YOU remember!) men sold apples on the streets, saw their furniture go back to the store, lost their houses, lost their farms. Will it happen again? It needn’t.

But to avoid the kind of depression we had after the last war—WE MUST HEAD OFF INFLATION NOW! And the best way to do that is to save your money.

When you don’t buy a thing you can get along without ... that’s helping to prevent inflation. When you decide this is a bad time to ask more money for the things you sell or to fight for a raise ... that’s helping to prevent inflation. When you pay up all your debts ... that’s helping prevent inflation. AND SOMETHING MORE!

It’s the best way to protect yourself against a depression if one should occur, and the best way to prepare yourself for tomorrow’s opportunities if times are good.

The smart thing today is to save, not splurge. Don’t get hooked again!

4 THINGS TO DO to keep prices down and help avoid another depression

1. Buy only what you really need.
2. When you buy, pay no more than ceiling prices. Pay your ration points in full.
3. Keep your own prices down. Don’t take advantage of war conditions to ask more for your labor, your services, or the goods you sell.
4. Save. Buy and hold all the War Bonds you can afford—to help pay for the war and insure your future. Keep up your insurance.

cordial. The section on "Learn to Use Rum", with the accompanying recipes, is particularly useful and timely.

Longer drinks, flips, juleps, punches and so forth, are covered in separate sections. Recipes for canapés and hors d'oeuvre are reprinted from the author's previous book.

All the tried and true favorites are in the book—and as you know it isn't everybody who can make a good martini or manhattan even when the bar fixings are available. In addition, there are dozens of new recipes to be tried out first on famille and later served on unsuspecting (but delighted) friends.

Two lively introductory chapters cover "What the Well-stocked Bar Will Need" and "Three Basic Rules for the Good Host"—"Host" specifically, since the author believes that the bar department belongs properly to the man of the house.

The C. L. Wares, of Glassboro, N. J., let you in on some extra-special Kitchen Plans!

Many evenings last summer, the Wares discussed "house plans," while Carol, 4 1/2, looked on. Mrs. Ware took over the Glassboro postmastership last year when illness forced Mr. Ware to retire. Their son, Charles 21, is in the Air Force.

The Wares' home. Said Mrs. Ware, "During the past months, we've sketched out all sorts of ideas for remodeling. But the first thing we talked about was an all-electric kitchen! Just think of the time and steps it'll save!"

Above, their kitchen as it is today. Notice the monitor-top General Electric Refrigerator. The Wares bought it 15 years ago, and they'll tell you enthusiastically, "Next to Charlie, our G. E.'s the best soldier in the family . . . gives wonderful service, every day!"

And here, as designed for the future by the General Electric Home Bureau, is the same kitchen . . . converted into a G.E. All-Electric Kitchen! Complete with sleek-lined, gadget-blessed G.E. Range and Refrigerator, its cost will be surprisingly little . . . and in it there'll be these other work-saving G.E. joys:

G-E Dishwasher. Stack the dirty dishes, flip a switch. In no time dishes, pots, pans, silver, glass, kitchen utensils will be washed safely, gently—cleaner than by hand! Lift the cover—they dry themselves.

The G-E Dishwasher will be a special boon for the maid-less family—the time saved by "automatic" dishwashing is amazing. For example, small families need wash dishes only once a day—for the G-E Dishwasher is big enough to hold everything they'd use!

G-E Disposal. This is good-bye to the garbage can! Here you have a self-cleaning electric drain that fits right into the kitchen sink, grinds up garbage and drains it away in two or three seconds!

Simply scrape excess food waste off the dishes and down the Disposal. Wham the cover on with a quick twist—and whirr! it's gone (even bones)! Ends trips to the backyard garbage dump, brings complete sanitation into the kitchen at last!

G-E Cabinets. They're styled to match the appliances, and designed to give worlds of roomy storage space.
