If Colgate is just a kid's cavity fighter, how come Ella Fitzgerald won't brush with anything else?

Soul-singing Ella Fitzgerald doesn't just see an audience. She sees the people out there. And cares. That's why this great performer, while winning armies of devoted listeners, has found friends in every part of the world.

Caring about people means caring for yourself. And Ella knows it. So she's a long-time user of Colgate. (It's a brisk, clean-tasting toothpaste that freshens breath as long as a leading mouthwash.)

Only your dentist can give teeth a better fluoride treatment than Colgate with MFP. But a great cavity fighter can be a powerful breath freshener, too.

Ask Ella. She wouldn't think of brushing with anything else.

Colgate with MFP...the breath-freshening cavity fighter.
Here's where a KitchenAid compactor stops looking like a luxury.

No matter how often you empty the wastebaskets, it never seems to be often enough.

Unless you've got a KitchenAid trash compactor. It's eerie but as reliable as our wastebaskets.

And it will smash your trash to one quarter or less of its original volume.

There's an easy-to-use, foot-controlled pedal that lets you toss in the small stuff without opening the bag or drawer (Use the trash bag for waste levels loads).

There's also an activated charcoal filter to eliminate odors. And you can use the KitchenAid compactor with or without trash bags.

Talk to your KitchenAid dealer today. Look in the Yellow Pages under "Dishwashers" or mail the coupon.

MADE IN HOLLAND

GERMAN SILVER CUP

I am enclosing photographs of an unusual old silver piece about which we have thus far been unable to find any information. Can you help?

H.B.H.—Salem, Ore.

In all probability your piece of silver is of German origin dating from 1800 to 1840. Others of this type that I have seen were used as traveling drinking cups. The piercing at one end seems to be a later alteration.

FRENCH MANTEL CLOCK

My family has owned this clock for several generations. It was originally French. Can you tell me more about it?

Empire style mantel clocks of this kind are generally called "pillar clocks" because of their four pillars or columns. They were widely popular in America from about 1820 to 1840 and more of them are found than any other type of French clock. The maker's name rarely appears.
ENGLISH SIDE TABLE

If we have been told that this piece is about 250 years old. Is that your opinion? It is a kind of early walnut. J.T.T. Swickley, Pa. Your side table, popularly called a lowboy in America, is of English manufacture, probably dating about the 1720s. The backplates to which the bail handles are attached are incorrect, as they are of later origin. Properly they should be of the "bat-wing" variety.

ARTILLERY BANK

I would appreciate any information you can furnish about my mechanical bank showing a soldier standing beside a mortar, which shoots the penny into the four-sided blockhouse. It says "Artillery Bank" on its base.

E.S. Allenhurst, N.J.

Your shooting bank was patented on March 29, 1877, and first manufactured by the Shepard Company of Buffalo, N.Y., later by E & E Stevens Company. This popular class of banks was illustrated in the Montgomery Ward catalogue of 1893 with the following description: "The Artillery Bank made wholly of iron, highly finished and bronzed throughout. . . Weight 1 pounds. Price $1.00."

ORANGE PEELER

Can you identify this piece from an old silver set? It is similar to a butter spreader but thicker. For what was it used?

Your piece of plated-silver flatware is probably an old orange peeler. A number of these devices were patented in the 1880s and 1890s, each different, but each designed to score the peeling and to remove it.

SWISS TEAPOT

This teapot in the form of a cat has the word "Thun" on the bottom. Can you possibly place its age and background?

J.B.S.—Hempstead, N.Y.

Your teapot in the form of a cat was made at Thun, Switzerland about 1890. The inspiration for it comes from teapots in the form of a seated squirrel and monkey by Johann Kaendler (1707-1771), made at Meissen, 1752.

A beautiful, earthenware Flask, the Columbia Eagle Flask, stands approximately 7½" high and 4½" wide.

A YEAR AGO, THIS BOTTLE WAS RARE. NOW IT MAY BE THE ONLY ONE IN EXISTENCE.

When we borrowed the original Columbia Eagle Flask from a museum, we knew we had a rare bottle found only in major collections. Then Guild experts made a startling discovery. Our bottle was not as rare as catalogued. It was a one-of-a-kind rarity. And now, an exact reproduction of this unique bottle can be yours, to be included in the Historical Bottle Collectors Guild's collection. Hand-made, each reproduction comes to you in a velveteen pouch and accompanied by a booklet outlining the bottle's history and documenting its authenticity.

This is a limited edition of 3,500, signed and numbered. Enclose your order and $27.50 for the flask.* Ohio residents add $1.24 sales tax for each flask.

Some Notes on Good Looks & Good Health

His and Her hair
why some grows
and some goes

By Caroline Seeborn

Hank goodness for hair. There are times these days when the only way to distinguish a man from a woman is by looking at his hair. If it's on his chin and not on his head, then we can make a pretty good guess that he's authentically male. Having established that, it's time to sympathize. It's so unfair that a man should be so splendidly hairy in some places and so absolutely bereft in others—that is, in the place where society decrees it matters most, on the top of his head. And don't start looking at his mother, it can be inherited from either side.

Why men go bald and women, on the whole, do not, is one of those unponderables that still elude the investigations of scientists, biologists, and doctors. Men's hair roots, that is the follicles in a male scalp, are no different, it seems, from women's. If you put a hair under a microscope, no expert could tell whether it came from a man or a woman. The only thing doctors can say is that there is a male and female pattern of hair growth: men are potentially subject to male pattern baldness, and women, with some exceptions, are not.

"Why do men go bald?" I asked Dr. Robert A. Berger, a dermatologist interested in both male and female hair disorders, and assistant professor at Mount Sinai College of Medicine in New York City. "It is simply a sex characteristic," he answered, "peculiar only in that it affects just a minority of men. If all men went bald at about the same age, just as they grow a beard, then nobody would worry. It would be accepted as a male characteristic. But because it only hits a certain number, and because most men lose more hair as they get older, baldness is regarded as abnormal: and it also becomes psychologically associated with aging, therefore is thought by many to be socially undesirable."

Before we women start crouching, however, let it be said that many women also suffer from hair loss—but lucky us, we tend to lose it in a less noticeable way. "Women don't usually show a bald spot on the top of their heads or a recession at the peaks of their foreheads, as men do," explains Dr. Berger. "But rather they show a thinning all over the scalp. For this reason you don't commonly see as much baldness in women as you do men. But millions of young and middle-aged women show a degree of hair loss that is at least enough to be disturbing to them. It's very common."

This form of hair loss in women seems to be the same as in men—inexplicable and unstoppable. What happens is that the hair follicles in the scalp gradually start shrinking, so that each generation of hair that grows is a little finer than the one before and grows for a shorter time. Ultimately the hairs become so small that they can only be seen through a magnifying glass. The effect is baldness. The hair follicles have not died, they are still there—only for some reason the shed hair does not grow again. Nobody has been successful yet in growing hair again from these follicles.

When you’re at the beach this summer, take a look around. You’ll see tans here and tans there. But you’ll also see the tans people notice—the tans by Coppertone. Coppertone is America’s favorite way to get a deep, fast, beautiful tan. And Coppertone helps prevent sunburn, too… while its special moisturizers help your skin stay young looking. So remember, you can get a tan. Or you can get a Coppertone Tan—the tan people notice.
"Some types of hair loss are temporary, caused by some specific change in a person’s metabolism"

There are many other reasons why women shed hair—apart from the obvious damage caused by too much bleaching or perming. The following types of hair loss are temporary, caused by some specific change in a person’s metabolism. The hair will usually find its normal cycle of growth and resting phases after a few months.

There are three common causes:

1. Trauma. Any severe shock to the system by illness or trauma can put the hair into the resting stage (telogen): thus the normal cycle is disrupted and hair falls out. For instance, a girl who goes on a crash diet and eats only vitamins for a month may well find that a month later her hair starts falling out, because of the metabolic shock to her system. But it’s only temporary—the hair soon grows back.

2. Pregnancy. At this time, hair follicles stay longer in the growing phase, with less shedding than usual. After the birth, they move into telogen, thus causing more shedding after about three months, all at the same time. After a while the cycle then returns to its normal “staged” timing.

3. Going off the contraceptive pill. Taking the pill is being, in a sense, in a state of permanent pregnancy. If you stop taking the pill, after a couple of months you may notice hair loss, just as after pregnancy. But this too, is temporary. The hair soon grows back.

At this point the tricky word hormone is probably popping into your mind. Pregnancy, pills, hormonal changes... What effect do hormones have on hair growth?

If you took a panel of normal women and deliberately gave them large amounts of male hormone, they would almost all grow beards. This means that hair growth on the face is a male characteristic that requires male hormone. Women have the same potential to grow facial hair, but normally they do not have the necessary amount of male hormone to bring it out (unless they have some gland disorder or tumor, which temporarily increases male hormone.)

As well as growing beards, about one third of them will start to show a male-pattern baldness. This means that the normal women we have described as suffering from a gradual form of permanent baldness probably started out with a susceptibility to hair loss, and that the normal amount of male hormone for a woman (about two-thirds of a man’s) is enough to cause some degree of hair loss for these women.

According to Dr. Berger, in this situation, adjustment of hormones can make a difference. “The conclusion I favor,” he says, “after many years’ study along with Dr. Norman Orentreich and others, is that estrogen [female hormone] can help women suffering from a slow, progressive hair loss over many years.” It is also possible that female hormone could help male baldness, but the amount required to be effective would also feminize them in other respects (enlarging breasts) so this treatment cannot be considered practical. “Not every woman should take estrogen,” Dr. Berger adds, “but it can be helpful and safe.”

Dr. Berger is working on his solutions. I have my own. Why don’t we change society’s attitude and make baldness a sign of wild attractiveness? Ful Brynner had a stab at it. Why can’t a shiny bald pate be as exciting as Adonis’s curls? Perhaps one day we’ll want to lose our difficult, unmanageable, boring-to-wash hair. Think how much time and money it would save. Yes, I like the idea. Bald is Beautiful.

BY WILLMORE

A new electronic device that lets lamp bulbs operate on 120 V, yet draw less electrical energy per watt, for use in lighting bulbs by 15 percent in the home. Several hundred manufacturers of bulbs only guarantee their “long life” bulb on a single lamp, or “600-hour” bulbs that together on an extension cord will last no more than 400 watts. You insert the plug in any electrical outlet; then compact the lamp to it. Voltage to the bulb is reduced also but not as much changing from a 100- to a 75-watt. The $2.98 device is a triple life of a bulb and a light output more evenly will slow discoloration than standard bulbs, Alladin Products, Hybrinetix.

Switched in six for wall mounting, “Wall-Togethers” is a series of pegboard and shell units, plus a clock and mirror. Available singly, in white, yellow, or bright green, the units can be combined in a variety of arrangements to meet storage and other needs in kitchen, bathroom, workshop, sewing areas, children’s rooms, closets. The pegboard includes ten assorted hooks; the clock is battery powered; a pocket unit holds letters, pencils, keys. The mirror is the mate of the clock. The Wipe Set includes three small shelves, fifteen screw-cap jars. All units are 12 inches square; smaller, 4-inch-high shelves, one with five plastic jars and a larger, 21-inch-wide shelf complete the series. Prices from $1.99 a unit to $149.95 for clock, Insta-Ware, Inc., at Harden Chemical.

If you plan to put up paneling yourself over existing plaster or wallboard, or simply hang heavy pictures or mirrors, you could use the Stanley stud finder. It locates the hidden wood posts or studs you must nail to support panels or pictures. The small cylindrical magnet is housed in clear plastic with a base grove for marking the walls with a pencil when studs are located. Stanley Tools.

Protection for your weekend house when you aren’t there can be handled by the “Care-er,” below—an electronic watchman that’s equipped with a four-pronged plug, which fits any telephone jack in your house. Set dials on the unit to your home number and calls you automatically. If temperature is too low, rises too high, or the heating systems fail, if smoke or gas leakage occurs, or water floods the basement, sensors detect it and your home phone will ring and continue ringer unit answered. You’ll hear one of two signals indicating which sensor is responding. A $129.50 unit includes Hico temperature sensors; water and smoke/gas detectors are extra accessories at $29.50. Accessory switches to place near entrances for reporting a break-in are also available at $15.00. Hytron, Inc., at Hammacher Schlemmer.

A ready made rack, easy to install in pantry, bar, or a cool closet in dining or family room provides handy wine storage. Complete with top, sides, bottom, and bar accessory drawer, it has an interior lattice structure that supports the wine bottles correctly. The 12-inch deep, 16-inch-high vertical model shown is made in three widths—13, 21, and 24 inches with the drawer. Horizontal models are also available and you have a choice of handrubbed oak, maple, cherry, walnut, or distressed pine finishes. Available from Wood Mode Cabinetry dealers.
You know how it is with garbage cans. They don't look pretty. And they don't smell pretty. And they have an unattractive way of attracting bugs and insects—especially flies. So most people hide their garbage cans behind greenery and around corners, hoping against hope that they won't be noticed.

Shell Can Care®:
Because scrubbing is not enough.
Shell Can Care can do anything about the way your garbage can looks. But it's your best answer to every other garbage problem. It will in fact do just about everything except scrub your garbage can.

Protection against odors and insects.
Can Care gives you double protection:
First of all, it's a remarkably effective deodorant. It doesn't reveal their location. Or their contents.

On top of that, Can Care is an amazingly effective insecticide! Flies, ants, gnats, and roaches, hate Can Care—and vice versa. With Can Care on the lid of your garbage cans, the odor is on those uninvited guests. Which lets the guests you do invite enjoy themselves.

Protection against embarrassment.
Don't let people these days like to entertain outside. The patio and the backyard are taking over from the living room. That makes Can Care even more important. Nothing can dampen a Sunday barbecue like a whiff of Friday's fish. And no one wants to share the hamburger—with a fly. Can Care helps protect you against both these awkward possibilities—and against a red face as well.

Easy and economical.
Can Care is simple to apply; adheres quickly and firmly to either metal or plastic containers. Even more important, Can Care works continuously day and night for up to three full months. That figures out to less than two cents a day. Only two cents a day. Can you afford not to protect your guests from the added odors? For those two cents, you get:

Shell Can Care. Controls bugs and odors in your garbage can.

SHARING IN THE GREENING OF NEW YORK —THE PARKS COUNCIL

BY SANDRA ODI

The Parks Council has always been concerned about keeping the city green. It has been the council's goal to make the city a more beautiful and livable place. Before the council's creation, there were no organizations dedicated to the creation, preservation, and maintenance of public parks, playgrounds, and recreation areas.

Studies of the parks have shown that community groups are concerned about green spaces and want to be involved in their management. The council is the solution to these problems.

The council's job is to work with city agencies, community groups, and private individuals to develop and maintain parks and playgrounds. They work to create beautiful, functional, and accessible spaces for all New Yorkers.

The council has programs in the following areas:

- Urban improvements: The council works on projects to improve the city's infrastructure, such as parks, playgrounds, and public spaces. They work with city agencies and community groups to develop plans and projects.
- Environmental education: The council organizes educational programs for schools and community groups to teach people about the importance of parks and the environment.
- Parks development: The council works on developing new parks and playgrounds in areas that need them. They also work to improve existing parks and playgrounds.
- Grants: The council provides grants to community groups to help them develop and maintain parks and playgrounds.

The council has a Board of Directors, a staff, and a budget. They work together to make sure the city's parks and playgrounds are a valuable resource for all New Yorkers. They work to ensure that the community has a voice in the management of the city's parks and playgrounds.

The council's goal is to work with the community to create beautiful, functional, and accessible spaces for all New Yorkers. They believe that parks and playgrounds are an essential part of the city's fabric, and they work to ensure that they are available to everyone.

The council is committed to working with the community to create a green and livable city for all New Yorkers. They believe that parks and playgrounds are an essential part of the city's fabric, and they work to ensure that they are available to everyone.
Webster defines to share as "to partake of, use, experience, or enjoy with others." Hospitality is one way of sharing, and summer is a particularly splendid time for exuberant sharing. And when you have the freedom of the outdoors, so much more chance for living it when you entertain in summer. So be a party sharer—not just a giver or goer this summer.

For instance, share your fascination for other lands with your friends and give an outdoor foreign feast—an Indonesian rijstaffel, rich with sate’s and sambals, or an Indian dinner party, an alfresco delight for a summer night. Bottle or rent several large hassocks or pile up big pillows in a circle on the ground around a “table” made from a Ping-Pong tabletop or sheets of plywood, raised on boxes or cinder blocks to a height compatible with the cushions. Cover the table with crisscrossings of brightly colored widths of cotton, mindful of the glorious shades of sari’s. Or use fanciful Madras bedspreads—vibrant in color, easy to set. Try ropes of threaded marigolds hung anywhere and everywhere, looped on the cloth, too—very Hindu. Light the scene with brass-hanging or standing lanterns, or fake them by piling gold-painted cans as candleholders. Create an Indian mood—burn sandalwood incense and treat your guests to background music of ragas. Time-Life’s The Cooking of India can help you choose and prepare an authentic menu and gives sources for any unusual ingredients. Golden, eye-delighting tandoori chicken can be cooked on your outside grill and accompanied by the classic raw vegetables and naan (leaf-shaped bread). For a larger party try unusual curries, the vegetable ones using dried legumes, eggplant, cauliflower, peppers, broccoli; have a fish dish as well. Be sure to treat your guests to background music of ragas. Time-Life’s The Cooking of India can help you choose and prepare an authentic menu and gives sources for any unusual ingredients. Golden, eye-delighting tandoori chicken can be cooked on your outside grill and accompanied by the classic raw vegetables and naan (leaf-shaped bread).

Introduce your guests to a different, delicious, not fiery Mexican lunch. Margaritas are natural openers and Kahlua with coffee is the finish. Margaritas are natural openers and Kahlua with coffee is the finish. Fall any afternoon you opened the garbage can, then you tortured it by throwing garbage in it. Some smells some bugs. And you'll stink. She'll Can Care can solve those problems. It has a deodorant to mask odors. And the insecticide to kill flies, gnats, roaches, and ants. And last for up to three full months.

BEAUTY AND HEALTH PRODUCTS
NEW THIS MONTH IN THE STORES

MACRUSTY ... Here is a double collection of soft, new colors... 16 shades in all from Ultra Frost and Ultra Velvet Powder Eye Shadow. Each comes in a mini-compact with its own sponge-tipped wand. There are twelve shades of Ultra Frost, great when used as a browbone highlighter, or for evening, $1.25, and six shades of Ultra Velvet that have a rich matte finish. $1.

FROSTY ... Summer humidity is always a problem for naturally curly hair that just wants to frizz... Satine Setting Lotion comes in two formulas that protect hair from dampness and wind, almost "sleek in" your set. Blue bottle for Normal hair; pink bottle for hair that has been tinted or bleached. Satine Setting Lotion, 3 oz., $1.50.

DON'T BELIEVE ... A fragrance that's crisp and cool to rub briskly on your skin is one way to heat the fatigue of summer heat. Colorado Sage Cologne is the real thing; so much so it's only sold in Colorado. If you don't happen to be there, order it directly through Bonnie Bell, Lakewood, Ohio 44107. It is meant for men, but any woman scent in summer is a race game! Colorado Sage Cologne, 3 oz., $9.50; Colorado Sage Cologne Concentrate, 1 oz., $7.50.

Bunya Shores ... There's a sun block in her new Sun Sensitive Sun Cream—a waterprooof ointment with a tinted base that needs to be applied only once a day. Wear it all day to block out sun completely, or apply it to your skin during those midday hours when the sun is very strong and you already have the basic "glow" you want on your skin. It will help control excess tanning when you still want to stay outside. Hereafter use the cream to prevent further accumulation of the effects of exposure. It even helps prevent freckles! Sun Sensitive Sun Creme, 1.9 oz. tube, $5. At Saks Fifth Avenue: Joseph Magnin: Marshall Field.

YEAR ... For skins that do not require a heavy sunscreen there is Deep Tanning Oil, which is both fragrance-free and hypo-allergenic. It's good for deepening a base tan. Deep Tanning Oil, 6 oz., $2.50. At Bloomingdale's: Carson, Pirie, Scott: Foley's: The Broadway.

CLINIQUE ... Streamlined in a handsome chrome case is a new concept in all-in-one makeup that's a 3-in-1 pressed powder. Used as a sheer eye shadow, Basic Eye Enhancer, gives a soft, slightly smudged, smoky look. Moisten the fine brush, you can stroke it on for an eye liner. Moisten again, and this time define your brow line. Basic Eye Enhancer in a for-everyone neutral gray—10 oz., $6.50. At Lord & Taylor: Bloomingdale's: Saks Fifth Avenue and all branches.

CHARLES OF THE RITZ ... After soaking up the sun be sure that your skin soaks up extra moisture. Skin Life After Sun Moisture Gel will help replace and replenish what has been lost. A soothing formula, it helps reduce the irritation of windburn, too. Skin Life After Sun Moisture Gel, 3.5 oz., $4. At Bonwit Teller: Bullock's, Wilshire: J.L. Hudson.

Six panoramic historical figurine groupings have been created by W. Goebel to celebrate the American Bicentennial. Handcrafted in white bisque, each group is limited to 400 numbered castings, bears the sculptor's signature, and is accompanied by a handsome parchment certificate of authenticity. For the serious collector, these treasures strengthen one's love of country by miraculously and magnificently recreating the great events and the traditions of our heritage.
We all want to be ourselves. We have respect for people who strike out and do their own thing. Some even think that being a member of a shared group may be a way of personal survival. At all events, it is reasonable that parents and children, individually, within the framework of a partnership, an enterprise, or a family group? Dr. Florence Denmark, Professor of Psychology at City University, New York, Author of "The New Woman: Dependent or Independent Variable" (Psychological Dimensions), tells us: "The main thing is not to get frightened about pursuing individuality. It doesn't mean there's no common ground, no togetherness. It's good for a number of reasons. What are these reasons? Independence adds solidity to any relationship because it prevents boredom. "Change and exchange are very fundamental factors in our human makeup. Independent interests, exchanging of ideas and thoughts pull people together. When you have a partnership, with one person making all the decisions, giving direction to the other, the situation is more predictable. It leads to boredom. And this creates a divergence, a weaker rather than a stronger union."

Independence gives us freedom to share more. Dr. Denmark continues. "And when you have freedom to make your own decisions, it makes you feel freer to belong to someone," she adds. "To be selfish is to a certain extent a healthy thing. What's the point of being a martyr and so self-sacrificing that nobody can stand you? If you are organizing yourself to suit yourself, it follows that you should be happy and make people around you happy. This brings good relationships and sharing." Independence allows for privacy, which in turn helps us value togetherness. While people need people, they also need to be alone. This, too, we know, is something basic. In all the new plans for living today we see more divisions in designs. The happiest configurations of spaces is often one that provides for people to be with people and to be in their own private zones or rooms. We understand that walls and even doors—far from being nervous-making negative components that generate a sense of exclusiveness or deprivation, are key elements to a more balanced way of life. We have to give ourselves undivided attention now and again," explains Dr. Denmark. "To plan, to think, to regroup our thoughts and emotions is a fundamental factor.

Independence fosters territoriality and a feeling of security. We can fulfill a need to stake out our own space. This doesn't mean a house need have a collection of private rooms. There can be one space used by various members of the family to pursue private interests. It's good for a number of reasons. "But the need for such personal space is very important. We must deal with space as we do with possessions, agreeing that something is mine or yours at times. Then at other times, acknowledging that something is ours."

This issue goes into this question of independence in living in detail. And we have come up with some fascinating solutions. The Albert Swankes remodeled a charming old house in Savannah with lots of give and take. He wanted the charm of the past; she wanted all the comfort of the present. He preferred a brown bedroom; her choice was pink. Their individual preferences survive, and beautifully counterbalance the restoration. Together they refurbished Pitot House, belonging to the Louisiana Landmarks Society, page 28. Her skill for reproducing 18th-century hangings matches his passion for authenticity. Their eye for antiques assembled a remarkable collection of furniture, and it's all on show to the public.

No question it's possible to make independence work in a partnership. Close-ups of three couples, page 36, demonstrate dramatically how much the ways in which we learn to share and think have changed. An as political scientist Warren Farrell points out, page 37, much of the change going on now and in the future will be linked with men taking a less automatic role in society. We're taking a new look at his and her roles, modifying the status quo. Bringing out the individual. If he wants to sew, why not? And let him have the place in which to do it. When a woman feels a strong urge to combine career with motherhood, the family should see the mother's activity outside the house as one on which the family depends." Warren Farrell notes as "not something she enjoys as an extra." Thinking more flexibly about what's his, hers, ours, or theirs can open your life, help you value other people more, and feel more valued yourself.
How do you make your house fit your family, instead of making your family fit your house? How do you give each individual member what he wants and still satisfy the whole family? How do you decorate for two or many? On the following pages are examples from a variety of families for suitting their needs, individual and shared.

HIS, HERS, AND THEIRS

She wanted the charm of the past, he wanted all the comfort of the present, so they restored a house in Savannah

When you bought a house, did you think about it? Paul and Mary Swanke did. They had been talking about the idea for years. Now that they had saved enough money, they were ready to make their dream come true. The house they chose was located in Savannah, a city known for its historic charm and architectural beauty. It was an old house, but it had potential. The Swankes saw it as a blank canvas to work with.

The Swankes, who are both architects, were determined to create a space that was both functional and beautiful. They wanted a house that reflected their personal style and shared interests. They spent months planning and designing the space, working together to create a home that was uniquely theirs.

Inside, the house is a blend of old and new. The Swankes kept many of the original features, such as the fireplace and the hardwood floors, while updating the rest to suit their modern lifestyle. They installed a state-of-the-art kitchen, a spacious living room, and a comfortable master suite. The house is also energy efficient, with insulation and efficient heating and cooling systems.

The Swankes love their house, and they think it reflects their personalities. They are proud of the work they did to restore it, and they enjoy sharing it with their family and friends. They are grateful for the chance to live in such a beautiful and historic city, and they are excited about the future of their house and their family.
Their — a new garden atmosphere created from the old dining room: to live and entertain in
I love old houses, but I like them comfortable. They don't suit the way we live today. They can be old-fashioned, but they suit one who is stylish. So this one is a compromise. It's old, but young, and full of life, which makes it unique. The living room has oak floors and red sofa. The apple walls and white columns. The bay window in the living room has a Venetian mirror. Nice old-fashioned glitter. The living room has a lot of light, which is nice. The bedrooms are papered in a mixture of stripes and wiggles and trimmed in Sun Yellow and white. What's new? The Eames leather chair. What's old? The Directoire secretaire. Ages apart. The bedroom floors, 3, 4, 5, and 6, are up top. My room’s the pink one, and Albert's is a velvet brown with a French daybed that was cut in two and made into twins. The baths, although they are designed to be a single-scheme, are not matching. The baths are not all the same. The guest bath has a shower, and the master bath has a tub. They are separated with a pocket door which can be opened if you want to talk or closed to be quiet. A matter of mood. Two in a room full of history. Two fireplaces in a room full of history.

"On the fly we are boxed in," says Mr. Sloan. "The children have to be taken to school, escorted to the theaters, chaperoned everywhere. In the summer we want them to be free, to be outdoors, exposed to the weather, to the sand and the green growing things, to the seagulls. They're alive to the beauty of it. They get up in the morning and are gone, out on their own errands. Norton spends a lot of his time at the table in the dining room, 3, playing cards or backgammon with some of the ten or eight people who love each other and are always coming and going, or staying over in the guest bunkroom just like the children's, 6, upstairs. Theirs—the delight of discovering and refreshing original colors, collecting the furniture

An antique gem on the fringe of New Orleans, Pitot House is a little mansion, once part of a plantation, that belongs to The Louisiana Landmarks Society. Not quite in mint condition, the house was offered to Mr. and Mrs. James Donald Didier as a residence if they would finish its restoration, turn it into a museum, and be its curators. The choice was an astute one. The Didiers worked and lived in an old town house in the French Quarter, which they had restored so beautifully that, for it, they received the Vieux Carre Commission's Award for Preservation—a rare honor. Finding the temptation to restore an 18th-century plantation irresistible, they left their antiques' business—dwelling (Didier's, Inc., going strong) and moved to Pitot House with their two children, most of their furniture—all of museum quality—and went to work.

They're a great team. What one can't do, the other can. They also believe that historic houses should not be filled with the odor of sanctity but the fragrance of baking bread. "We wanted a living organism," they say, "not a tomb."

Pitot House, consequently, is as alive, as unwrinkled, as the day it was built. Downstairs study, left, has renewed white plaster walls, putty green ceiling, brick floor—plus a portrait of James Pitot, a New Orleans mayor who lived in the house. Upstairs gallery, below, is shuttered in its original forest green. Borrowed from the Didiers' shop are two supper guests—carved wood ladies from the plantation saloon of an old Mississippi side-wheeler.

Dining room, top, with gothic chairs, a rare and beautiful dining table, and a punkah fan—18th-century air-conditioner. Children's room, right, has pencil-post beds, and a great deal of needlework by Mrs. Didier—all done in toile de Jouy. Typical, elegant mantel, below, with a hearth of Spanish tiles golden as amber.

Pitot House is open to the public on Thursdays only, 11 to 4. Appointments anytime for group tours. Admission, $1.50.
RESTORING A HISTORIC HOUSE

An old plantation house brought to life and shared with the public

Silk bed hangings and curtains in the master bedroom, right, are designed in the Federal style and result of Mrs. Didier's respect for authenticity and brilliant needlework. The cypress floor had been overlaid with oak, which was swiveled away with a crowbar, making any return to the 18th century impossible.

Mantel, below, is the type that Mrs. Didier and her husband, J. R. Didier, discovered in the chimneybreast of the Federal-style drawing room. The mantel, below center, was designed from a photograph of the original and has both a lower and an overmantel, and is ornamented with carved lion's heads. The symbol of the French Revolution, a Sheraton sofa and chair are original, and the 'bunch of grapes' armoire and coffee table are of the Federal period. Theirs—a love of antiques and the right place to put them.

The kitchen is through the far double doors. Original colors (found by digging through an armor of cypress paint) are rich and of the period: forest green for the solid shutters, a beautiful Venetian red for the beamed ceiling and the bow-topped double doors.

Three couples describe the way they made their independence work in a partnership

By Caroline Svefstad

E\( d\)win and Ka\( y \) Tile\( w\)ows have been married forty-two year\( s \). "Looking back, I see Edwin, for thirty years roving correspondent for the London \textit{Times Literary Supplement}, the world was quite different then. I'm not sure I agree with \textit{all} the women's \textit{lib.} (Continued on page 37)"
Breaking out of conventional roles is just as important for men as it is for women. The breadwinner role creates one of the strongest pressures on men, says Warren Farrell, who found he gained a new life when he liberated himself from established ideas of what a husband should be.

By Beverly Russell

The new liberated man can see that men's liberation and women's liberation are parallel and integrative and why both are so tied into each other. Old masculine aggressive habits need to be unlearned just as much as traditional feminine ones that place women in a subordinate position to men.

"Many of the traditional female values are just the qualities politics and management are now discovering are missing in their approach. Politicians and business people have learned to talk their way in and out of anything, but thousands of companies are discovering that some of the salespersons who do best are the ones who listen. Most men, according to Warren and some women, too, are guilty of self-listening. "Listening for about a 10-second period to what a person is saying, picking up the gist of the point and then starting to formulate a reply, statement, or question in their own mind, which they jump in with when the other person pauses. In other words, dominating the conversation." When you learn how to listen more carefully, to ask people questions to draw out more of what they're saying, rather than interrupting, the dialogue is more effective. Each contributor is really connecting, exchanging ideas, saying something of value.

With self-listening on the other hand, no one is really listening to anything but merely promoting a series of the self-listener's monologues. Progress is very limited by comparison.

As deeply rooted as the desire to dominate in conversation is the idea that men must always control their feelings. This flows from the value system that places success above vulnerability—so crying or any other show of expression that might be construed as weak, is harmful to the strong masculine image. In 1972 Senator Muskie learned the price of crying when campaigning for President. The New York Times reporting an incident in which he reacted with tears to a comment made about his wife, said: He showed himself to be a man who tends toward emotional outbursts under pressure." There was no applause or his ability to show feeling. "You will hear people say, if a man wants to express himself saying or what have you, no ones stopping him. Warren continues, "but no one's stopping him because it seems to suggest that it is something to be pitied."

Or as Warren Farrell says, "Political or business as an end in itself rather than a human concern as an end."

"Politics or business as an end in itself or does it precipitate a merging of sexes, or does it precipitate a merging of societies? Because men treat conflict and combat in a competitive way, says Warren, they don't take in the meaning of what is happening around them, don't think it through carefully, don't come to any thoughtful pondering of basic ideas."

Just how this value system is put into practice can be seen in a labyrinth of examples in everyday life, he says. Take for instance newspapers. "Journalists balk at the suggestion that crime be listed in small type as are obituaries. Why? Because men treat conflict and combat as the all-important processes of life. This is their reality. In the real world, a man's world, the best of the feminine values, which are more human values, are considered nice but unrealistic."

A woman can put Dr. on her resume and thousands of companies are discovering that some of the salespersons who do best are the ones who listen. The new liberated man can see that men's liberation and women's liberation are parallel and integrative and why both are so tied into each other. My wife and I have closets in every room, explained interior designer Martin Lipsitt. "Twice a year or so we take everything out of them and say we must do something about them. We're always talking about making them more convenient." Not long ago, Mr. Lipsitt ran into a couple who decided on more positive action. They asked him to design totally new storage for their bedroom. This led to much creativity and, eventually, to the handsome, fulfillful objects seen here and on the following four pages—brilliant inspiration for anyone who wants to reorganize on a do-it-yourself basis. "The wife in this case wanted to be organized, so I put a drawer for every glove," Mr. Lipsitt continued. "I started designing drawers in tall units of different sizes, but I thought they looked kind of dull and boring. Then I realized the dressers should have a more sculptural quality and that it would be all the more interesting to have a piece of sculpture in the house that in fact turned out to be utilitarian when you open it up. I like the element of humor in that idea."

These new designs offer storage somewhere between the normal room closets and the wall-hung shelves and smaller cabinets, which many people resort to because there just isn't enough room to put things away. They are mobile and easy to clean (by being taken apart and reassembled to suit your changing needs) and are totally table (moving when you move). How you use them is entirely up to you. They are composed of multiple performance towers (wall towers) that can be added to or can be changed according to your own particular needs. "Above all," Mr. Lipsitt says, "they offer ease of use. Because they vary in depth, you don't have to work your way through layers of things in front to get to something you want at the back."

Wall towers can be lifted, shifted, and hung from a bar

separate step towers can move together, stand alone or stand in a corner

Looking like a super-sized accumulation of children's building blocks, the freestanding Step Towers on these pages make very good sense for his and her personal storage. Two units may stand side by side, by the wall, or stand in the center of the room. They are fun to walk around. Marvin Lipsitt, designer, parallels their remarkable qualities: "They're undoubtedly connected, yet each is separate and has its own individual identity. They get along together and are perfectly equal with no differences at all, which is as it should be." A couple stand to gain tremendous storage space with this imaginative design—about 30 percent more room than in a 6-foot, double chest of drawers. Yet the Step Towers with their generous bottom drawers and pyramid of shelving aren't cumbersome, awkward, or overwhelming in a room, and the topmost shelves are easily reached by both him and her. The two sections, of course, can be simply moved apart and placed solo, if this fits your space better—single units slip conveniently into corners, opposite page, top left. Again, the depth of the shelving is part of its success—the proper dimension for one shirt or sweater, or one towel if you decide to employ the unit as a linen closet, opposite page. Each section closes with its own big door. Mr. Lipsitt spray painted these towers Sun Yellow "but they would look dynamic," he adds, "in any sculptural color, say brown or navy blue." Think of Step Towers going happily into children's rooms, too, for toys and clothes. They would work well in a big living kitchen, could perform as a sewing or handcraft center. They could take a gardener's small tools, standing in the foyer, perhaps. They're fun to look at and when you open them, surprise, surprise what's inside? Just things!

Walk-around Step Towers are 6 feet 11 1/4 inches high and 2 feet 5 1/2 inches wide at the base of each unit. They are made of U.S. Plywood's Duraply plywood. The storage shelves are 1 3/4 inches deep, but, of course, they are staggered in width and height. The topmost space is 9 1/2 inches wide, and 16 inches high. The bottom shelves are 8 1/4 inches high and 24 1/2 inches wide. There are three hinges attached to each flush door and again fingergrips to open.

Each tower is on four glides, which makes it easy to adjust. Each tower is 19 inches wide, 6' 8 3/4" high, and 6' 5" long. Each tower is made of a single piece of white birch plywood.

Nothing is more “theirs” than a bedroom—or more “his/hers” than a bathroom. Mr. and Mrs. Richard Thompson, with the help of designer François Catroux, have combined the two.

One end of their long, large bedroom is for sleeping, opposite page, above. At the other end, below, facilities for luxurious washing and bathing are only partly enclosed by the tall piqué-covered walls that hold the marble-topped tub. The combination works beautifully. It’s companionable when the Thompsons prepare for an evening out: A soak in the mirror-framed tub, left, doesn’t interrupt conversation. Twin sinks set in marble, below, encourage chat. It’s private, too—the toilet and bidet have their own enclosure, with a door. During the day the room is her domain, holding the comforts of a whole house, a small refrigerator, built-in banquettes soft with pillows on either side of the sinks, a wall of closets opposite the windows. Daylight enters but the world is excluded by lacy filigree shutters.

“I live very much in the bedroom,” says Danielle Thompson, who is a screenwriter. The carpet, like the piqué, is one of Mrs. Thompson’s favorite colors. It was made to order, matched to a scrap of vinyl she has carried around for years. White piqué covers the bed, part of a broad white stripe, formed with shag rugs and wooden headboard-canopy, that wraps up the whole room like a ribbon around a box.

a whole family teams up to build
A FLOATING HOUSE

The Queen Lilioukalani, a 60-foot ketch-rigged catamaran that rides with the wind and wins, just happens to be a complete floating house as well—for Mr. and Mrs. Robert B. Goodman and their daughters, Margaret and Carrie. What’s more, the Goodman family built the cat themselves, in a five-year project of sharing that fulfilled a dream they’ve had all their lives.

Bob Goodman is an engineer and a retired navy officer of 27 years’ experience who has been building boats all his life. “Bob’s idea of relaxation,” says his wife Lorry, “is to design another boat” (for relative novices, ships stores and marine architects are on hand with plans and advice). Bob built the Queen practically single-handed, using Royal Marine Plywood from U. S. Plywood, Dow Chemical sealant, and polypropylene cloth coated with Epox resin and curing agent from Shell Chemical. The whole family pitched in to sand and paint, with paints and protective Cavthane, a moisture cured polyurethane from Woolsey Marine Industries. Carrie was drafted to paint the hitchhiker staterooms—tiny compartments in the sterns—because, she laments, “I was the only one who fit.”

Inside, Bob’s double goal of combining speed and livability into one remarkable house-calculated materials as well as design—“What we wanted from this small area,” says designer William Machado, “was maximum usability and visual space, keeping in mind this is, after all, a racing boat.” The strategy was to keep visual divisions at a minimum, use a space expanding background color (sand tones with white on ceilings and around windows) and ingenious, terraced banquettes that double the seating capacity and provide sleeping space for six. And above all, to use lightweight minimum care materials. Aluminum blinds by Levolor admit light but not glare by day, contain cabin light for safe starlight sailing. Flat cushions are Naugahyde, made (as were the sails) by Hogshire Sailmakers, in red, orange, and yellows; pillows are signal flags: snap-dash colors against the sea of blue.

Catamaran designed for speed, equipped for living
Dining for 7, sleeping for 17, full galley and "back porch" cockpit
Everythin about the Queen Lilioukalani meets specific requirements. Lorry, an inventive cook who adores entertaining, needed a big galley—and got a huge one, full of conveniences like a double sink and two refrigerators. Counters and ceiling are Micarta—carefree and seaworthy. Dishlockers are Marine Teak Hardwood Plywood by U.S. Plywood. There's a pantry down in the hold, and Lorry—having made wine on board, a wine cellar. Bob installs a hatch-cover, while Lorry and Margaret hand-sew the immense forward net that takes the place, on a catamaran, of a sundeck. The completed afternet stretches overhead. Bending on sails, Margaret paints one of the storage lockers to be found under every seat. Carrie and her brother apply Naugahyde to a wall. Dining area consists of a Micarta table and raised U-shaped banquette that seats seven with ease. Door at right leads to "back porch," a protected cockpit. A few steps down to port and starboard lead to the twin hulls, their curved interior walls lined with teak-patterned Vinylgard paneling by U.S. Plywood. "Cabin soles" (floors in English) are covered with skid-proof Marine Naugahyde. Off the corridors are staterooms and shower. Margaret's berth, boasts a double bed, covered, like all the beds, with Naugahyde bedcovers made by Bob's mother. In the main living space, the forward bulkhead is covered with a thin teak veneer called Flexwood by U.S. Plywood. All banquettes are covered, like the floor, with "Ridge Trail" carpet of Kodel by Trend Mills (Bob coated the backing with latex to discourage mildew). Besides being able to accommodate lots of people, the high banquettes take advantage of the Queen's 360-degree visibility. "Seeing the horizon in all directions helps prevent seasickness," declares Bob. "I always keep a supply of Dramamine just the same," says Lorry. For shopping information, please turn to page 101.

Two gentlemen gardeners find new places for vest-pocket salads

1 His salad garden by the front walk

A garden that looks good enough to eat, and is. borders cookbook writer Robert Ackart’s sunny driveway and front path. Like three salad bowls, three beds are crisp with a variety of lettuces, green and Ocel basil, purple-blossomed chives and other herbs, white-blossomed roquette (rugola), cherry tomatoes, French strawberries, even marigold petals that are safely edible and add a sun shower to summer salads. Biweekly sowings of lettuce and roquette keep these greens coming till frost. Basil makes new leaves all season if pinched back, not allowed to flower. Many of the herbs survive New York winters outdoors; while others, like rosemary are potted up in fall for indoor use. Garden A, see plan, has flat and curly parsley, five kinds of lettuce (Buttercrunch, Bibb, red Ruby, Slowbolt, Sal Bowl), dill, radishes, roquette. Garden B, around a boulder near the house, chives (common, garlic, broad leaf, fine leaf), rosemary, tarragon, orange thyme (lemon, silver, and ornamental red, white, and woolly), everbearing strawberries, marigolds, gray and green santolina. (Larger herbs like borage, swartwicelily, and lovage are planted by a back door, as are rambling mints.) Garden C, tipped with marigolds and wears a pretty ruff of lettuces. It is bushy with basil quette. Patio tomatoes, lemon balm, marjoram, sage, summer savory. Some of Ackart’s herb recipes will be in The Thrifty Cookbook, (Grosset & Dunlap, .97)
Vegetable gardens

Red beds along front are a delicious stop to welcome guests. Door A between drive- and tiny Lord & Alsham greenhouse measures 9 feet. Gardens C have flowers as well as vegetables and herbs.
A shady backyard with a pool in the only sunny corner gave Kirk Deck with, a student at Reed College, Oregon, little room for the organic vegetable garden he wanted to grow during a summer vacation at home in Connecticut. So he made the most of a sunny 20-foot strip between the pool and a border of evergreens and flowers. He stretched it all with staked tomatoes and 12-foot Mammoth sunflowers, seen above right. He planted some twenty other crops a short time later. After the initial spacing, he mixed natural fertilizers into the soil. He grew hedges of marigolds and nasturtiums as companion planting, a sort of "buddy-system." (Many gardeners praise marigolds for saving vegetables from nematodes and root flies.) When borers threatened his zucchini and pumpkins, he dusted the stems with wood ashes and had no further trouble. A mulch of grass clippings served to keep moisture in and weeds out. On view on the pool side are handsome red-stemmed chives and big-leaved zucchini and cantaloupe. Toward the back are squash, pumpkins and sprawling cucumbers. Slow growing tomato plants, sugar ant, peppers, chives, and onion sets were bought at a nursery. Everything else in the garden was raised from seed, including such money-savers as spinach, lettuce, radishes, beets, beans, and broccoli.

New ways to freeze food for extra freshness

Now, when fruits, vegetables and herbs, and fish are plentiful is the time to squirrel away extras in the freezer for later, barren months.

Freeze fish in salted water to prevent fishy flavor and keep the flesh moist and never dry. Cooks for a minute or two to reduce it to JUNI, otherwise it develops oil livors, its color and stocks in the lipids for convenient addition to sauces. Snap plastic freezes perfectly in snap plastic containers. Freeze it in covered containers. Allow tart shells frozen in aluminum plate, plastic seal with freezer. In aluminum to use later for gratin, casserole dishes, and sauce. Mrs. Foster also suggests aluminum foil is useful for packing awkward shapes for the freezer, wrapping individual hamburgers, separating slices of butter. Do not freeze cooked fish excepting an egg, lobster, or dogfish in a sauce.

Cooked crab and lobster meat should be packed tightly in a new or snap top in polyethylene containers to freeze.

When buying fish fillers ask for head and bones to make fish stock to freeze, suggests Julie Dannenbaum in The Saturday Review (Freeze), who always keeps frozen fish stock on hand as she finds it a too salty substitute. She freezes all sauce, and stocks by the cupful for convenient addition to sauces.

Game can be frozen with feathers on. Do not freeze before plucking. Mrs. Cleckman Americans this and finds the birds frozen with feathers on more moist and flavorful.

Vegetables must be blanched to slow action of the enzymes that help them grow, otherwise they develop all flavors, discolor, and toughen. Then quick-cook before freezing. Blanch and chill 1 pound quantities in water.

Asparagus freezes successfully, in a salt water solution and tastes like fresh asparagus, maintains Roger Vassal's. Blanch stalks in empty milk cartons, fill with water and freeze. Remove and seal in plastic containers.

Sorrel, can be improved all year with the aid of a freezer. Julie Dannenbaum washes it and cooks for just a minute or two to reduce it to a puree consistency. Freeze in covered containers to use later for Potage German (sauteed) soup or sauce for fish.

Sulfur tomatoes made into a quick tomato sauce freeze perfectly in snap plastic containers.

Legs and baby onions that have to be removed from the garden at the end of summer can be blanched quickly and frozen in plastic wrap. Mrs. Leonard Birnbaum does this and uses throughout the winter for leeks. A mixture of the peeled and sliced in the winter when lettuce is expensive. Use for braising. Celery, too, can be frozen in chunks for adding to stocks, as Harrods of London does.

Bread freezes magnificently. James Beard, author of Beard on Bread (Knopf), a prolific baker wraps his leaves first in clear plastic wrap then in a plastic bag sealed with wire to retain their freshness. Fresh yeast freezes well, too.

Packaging Tips

- Aluminum foil is useful for packing awkward shapes for the freezer, wrapping individual hamburgers, separating slices of butter.
- Freezer-weight bags for packing vegetables and sauces can be put in lightly sugar water, marinating sauce, and refrigerator dishes, milk and frozen. When frozen, remove can from and open some useful convenience goods. We will freeze in two separate plastic bags.
- Freeze in small quantities in quotation marks.
- Mark all frozen items. You may fall into a rancid flavor freezer tape, which can be marked with soft black pencil.
- Dry ice, in a 2-lb. box, for each 2-lb. of frozen food. Place a dessert in a freezer bag, which can be marked with soft black pencil.
- Paper cups, 2-inch diameter, are used for freezing baby food, baby milk.
- Lightly dust many before freezing to protect from freezer burn.
- Freeze and thicken as needed. Pesto sauce, for quick spaghetti dinners, is frozen in plastic freezing. It as a pesto sauce to be used throughout the winter on pasta.

Herb butter: This is the best way to freeze herbs, suggests Marcella Hazan in The Baking Book (Harper & Row's Magazine Press) freezes pesto sauce for quick spaghetti dinners. For pesto, Mrs. Hazan freezes the puréed basil, parsley, olive oil, and garlic without cheese. When defrosted, she adds the combined Parmesan and Pecorino cheese, thinning with a little butter and cooking liquid as she tosses the pasta.

Pesto frozen in ice-cube trays is convenient for serving unexpected guests. Mrs. Leon and Birnbaum removes cubes when frozen and stores in plastic bags; takes out a cube per person for quick pesto suppers.

When chopping parsley, pop the extra tablespoon into a plastic bag, seal, and freeze to be used later. Or chop up a whole bunch of parsley, pop the parsley into a small (Herb-OX) container as Isabella Gelbard does. Miss Gelbard suggests extra cubes to freeze in the same way. Freeze fresh herbs without washing; if washing is necessary, pat dry, carefully in plastic bags, a sprig to a bag, staple bags together by the herb; as Gertrude Foster, editor of the Herb Grocer magazine, does. Herbs disintegrate quickly when defrosted so they should always be packed in small convenient quantities. Mrs. Foster also adds herbs to water-filled ice-cube trays to float in a punch bowl.

Herb butters retain the fresh flavor of herbs successfully after freezing. Mrs. Birnbaum adds minced shallots to all her butters; rolls them into long sausage shapes, wraps in wax paper, packs six rolls in a plastic bag, and seals. They can be removed easily to size-off just the quantity you need. Rewrap and return to freezer.

Chives and basil or thyme and savoy are combined for herb butter by Robert Ackart, author of Fruits in Cooking (Macmillan). Chopped fine they are added to sweet or salted butter and packed into custard cups to freeze. When frozen, remove from cup and store in plastic wrap.

easy entertaining on summer 8, here are eight quick desserts you can make ahead and store in the refrigerator or freezer and can go to the table at a moment’s notice.

ICK TRUFFLE from Richard: Line an 8” or 9-inch soufflé or crystal bowl with lady finger cookies. Sprinkle some cherries over the lady fingers and layer with fresh strawberries or bananas. Make a custard from Bird’s Dessert Custard Mix following the directions on the package but adding 1 cup milk and 1 tablespoon gelatin to the custard. Pour half of the custard over the strawberries or bananas. Add another layer of lady fingers and custard. Topping it up with fruit. Cover the trifle with whipped cream and sprinkle it generously with shelled pecans or walnuts or candied violets. Chill. Serve 6.

Chocolate cream from Edna Lewis: Melt 6 ounces almond chocolate bars over hot water. Mix in 1 teaspoon vanilla or rum, add 1/2 cup heavy cream. Chill. Serve 4.

WINE CREME from Mrs. Peter Siehl: Beat yolks of 6 eggs with 1 cup sugar until well mixed and add grated rind of 2 lemon and 1 orange and gradually pour in 1 cup dry white wine, 1/2 cup lemon juice, 1 cup orange juice. Stirring constantly so mixture does not curdle.

Beat the whole mixture over a high flame with a wire whisk until it thickens and coats the spoon. About 3 minutes. Soften 1 envelope plus 1 teaspoon gelatin in 3 tablespoons kirsch or rum. Add to this mixture and cook about 1 minute longer, stirring well. Remove from fire and chill. When cream is set and jelled, add 6 stiffly beaten egg whites and fold in well. Chill again. Serve 6.

BAKED STUFFED PEACHES from Bruce Bolan of The Ballroom Restaurant in Manhattan. Cut 4 peaches in half, remove stones, and scoop out most of the pulp leaving a shell. Add the pulp to 4 ounces crushed macaroons, 1 egg yolk, 2 tablespoons sugar, and 1 ounce butter and stuff peach halves with the mixture. Bake on ovenproof dish and bake the stuffed peaches at 350° for 30 minutes. Serve 4, warm or cold.

Strawberries with Raspberry Sauce from Mrs. Robert S. Brown; Make a raspberry sauce with 1 box frozen raspberries and 1/4 cup raspberry jelly (seedless) in a blender. Pour over 2 pints strawberries, chill. Serve 6.

BAKED STUFFED APPLES ROQUEFORT: Core and pare 6 Rome Beauty apples 1/2 of the way down the stem end. Combine 3/4 cup melted butter and 1 cup chopped white almonds, 2 tablespoons cognac, and a little brown sugar. Mix in 2 tablespoons crumbled Roquefort with 3 cups finely chopped walnuts, 2 tablespoons cognac, and a little cream if needed. Spoon the mixture over the cooled baked apples. Serve 6.

RAY PLUM SQUARES: Toss 1 pound fresh California plums about 2 cups in all, washed, quartered, and over the top of the apples. Make a crust and pour the mixture into the center of the crust. Cover the container and blend until the consistency is that of fine snow. Serve 4, warm or cold.

Surprise Ice from Emerick Bronson: Steep 1 ounce assorted candied fruit in 1/2 cup brandy for 30 minutes. Whip 1 pint heavy cream until it stands in peaks, add 1/2 cup confectioners sugar and whip again. Fold in brandy-soaked candied fruit. Freeze. Serve 4.

Liquor Bar in Frankfurt, that will save your life with a straight apéritif such as a bitter Cynar or a St. Raphael or a mixed Neapolitan. They make theirs in a non-alcoholic, from dry vermouth, one of Campari, and one of gin stirred, with ice, in a tall glass with a twist of lemon peel dropped into it.

As you sit at the Cafe de la Paix on the Place de la Toperie in Paris, you might feel like having a beer. If you order this in "American," however, you are more likely to get a Buckfast, which may shock you even more than the alkoholfrei Germans. For this is an apéritif and wine and very aromatic, but good mood Von. Especially in a cocktail, a 2 part dry vermouth, 1 part rye whiskey and 1 part rye, ice, stirred, and strained as is done in London's Savoy Bar.

There is also the Zaza, made with half Byrrh, half gin, and a twist of orange peel. Boost the strength of this one, and make it even more aromatic, by using 1 1/3 measures gin, 3 1/3 measures. In "American," 1 measure Byrrh, stir with ice, strain into wine glass.

The choice of an apéritif before a meal depends more on the company and its mood than on the food. After a hard day at the office, cognac and water is a good pick-me-up. It is easy on the palate and much reviving after a dose of polluted city air. Because brandy is made from wine as a base, it goes better with wine, if you are having a meal after that, than a whiskey does. Not that whiskey and soda or water isn't very effective, too.

If it is just plain relaxation you want, a dry sherry is gentle and very calming. One of the drier of this favorite apéritif, almost as stringent as a dry Martini, is Tom Pepe, which the Spaniards often drink straight, and even on the rocks. However, sherry is delicious in some kinds of mixed drinks, too.

In Spain, you may run across a mixture consisting of half a wine glass of sherry to which the white

“Most people would rather have a long, appetite awakening apéritif of some sort than a short, exotic one”
"Almost any kind of wine, spirit, or cocktail can be turned into an apéritif"

An egg has been added, shaken with ice, and strained into a glass. Sometimes this is dusted with nutmeg or cinnamon. Here is also the easier combination of a measure of sherry and a dash of fresh orange.

One of the best natural apéritifs is champagne. Not only does it taste good, but it has a psychological lifting property that can be attributed to magic. Like capers, for one thing, champagne comes to the rescue whenever a faint apéritif feeling is brought among comparative floggers and need to seem amiable and relaxed instead of tense, nervous racked as you probably are. It also helps with the sudden-ness of the arrival of those strange men because you still need to do in a bottle to have a light refreshing barrie dissolver.

In such unexpected situations when you are host, you should seriously concentrate on quantity rather than quality. Most people told rather have a long appetite taking apéritif of some sort over a short, exotic one. Recently visited one of America's most overleagable food and wine situations—James Beard—for an aperitif. When I arrived, I was so well; I thought I would prefer a glass of Perrier water to any alcohol and said so. Jim is one to be put off by a guest's strange teetotalitarianism, so suggested he might have a high-idea—how about a Lillet? Well, sold me, and a plain Lillet vermouth on the rocks is, as I discovered, then, a most worthy retort of tired brain, tired teet, and relief in general.

British apéritif connisseur, Bill Batchelor, used to claim that vermouth was the best bulk against overweight. Of the mouth, among the French and best types are Lillet and Chantilly, the champagne of the vermouth varieties to my mind, with Billy Prat the old reliable. Among those vermouths, which are now made in dry as well as sweet versions, Martini & Rossi Dry and Cinzano Bianco are two of the more popular ones.

An American expert, Leon Huns, suggests mixing equal parts dry vermouth, sweet vermouth, sherry, white wine, and brandy for an "apéritif cocktail." This requires a minimum of fuss and palaver because once mixed it can be kept in the refrigerator for days, and what is more, even whisky drinkers are alleged not to be allergic to it.

Of course, Pernod and Ricard are modern legal substitutes for the famed oldtime apéritif, with the world record reputation for wickedness. Absinthe. What was supposed to do the doing with Absinthe was the wormwood in it. But I suspect it's local quality was at least much the responsibility of its whopping 136 to 150 proof—which is mighty strong. These days it is hard to find the real thing except in Spain and Latin America. But a Pernod can be turned into Pernosit if you use a part Pernod, a dash comme de menthe, 5 parts water. Pours both the palate by its licorice-anis overtones and the eye, by its pale green-yellow shimmer.

The Portuguese, despite the fact that most of the rest of the world drinks their famous fortified wine as an after-dinner drink, use port for an apéritif. The surest way to avoid a Pernod is by having at hand the dim, serve black coffee and delicious port at all hours. Among the best—Ferrarinha, especially in its white manifestations. Cold and slowly sipped, it makes a marvelous opening gambit to a meal. But the drier versions of Sandeman, Cream, and Osborne are port names to conjure by too, to be served before a meal. Port can be a finisher as well as a starter, for it makes an effective nightcap because of its slow-inducing sleep.

In the cabin of the apéritif train comes the British with a small but good contribution in the Pimm's Cup series. Not a horse race, but a set of spirit based apéritifs. Pimm's No. 1, the gin based one, makes a fine Singapore Sling. Combine 2 measures Pimm's No. 1 with 1 measure cherry brandy, the juice of 2 lemon, and a dash bitters. Shake well with ice, strain, and garnish in a tall glass with fruit and mint, and you are well on your way to where the sun comes up like thunder out of China across the bay.
Andy Warhol on food from ketchup to caviar

by Beverly Russell

A ndy Warhol has come a long way from the modest ketchup cans that he and his friends would eat at the Factory. The man who transformed the New York art scene into a consumerist paradise has now become a culinary icon. His influence is evident in everything from the art he created to the food he consumes. "Spaghetti 'absolutely plain, no butter or oil, just lots of lemon juice squeezed over it, which I learned in Italy last year when I was making a movie with Liz Taylor,'" Warhol once said. He is known for his simplicity in cooking and eating, favoring dishes that are easy to make and quick to prepare. His late-night suppers at the Factory were famous for their simple yet delicious meals, often featuring spaghetti and a variety of sauces. Warhol's approach to cooking is to keep things simple, focusing on the freshness and quality of the ingredients. "I like to eat plain, with a lot of salt and pepper," he said. "I don't like to eat too much, I like to eat little at a time." His cooking philosophy is reflected in his art, where he often uses simple, everyday objects as inspiration. "I like to collect things," he once said. "I like to have a lot of things around me." Warhol's love for food and art is evident in his self-portraits, which often feature him at the dinner table or with a plate of food. His influence continues to be felt today, with chefs and food enthusiasts around the world inspired by his simple, yet sophisticated approach to cooking.
of the board.

Dudley and Beverly Morris have been married five years. He is Deputy Commissioner for the New York City Addiction Services Agency. She runs the Theater for the Forgotten, an organization that brings theatre to people who are in prisons and institutions. Demanding jobs, for this couple, who have one small daughter, how do they do it?

"When we got married," Dudley explains, "we simply went on doing what we were doing before. Beverly had her own life, and her own job, and she wanted to continue it. So I didn't need to help her give them up. I had my life and my career, and I kept on doing that. It was no big deal."

So they made no ceremony out of their partnership. No plans, no agreements. This meant that certain things never changed. "I have my own bank account," Beverly says, "which I have always had in my own name. So that makes me feel independent. I also have my own savings, so if anything happens I know I have that."

They never started a joint bank account. Beverly pays for the food, the laundries, and part of Littlefender's schooling. Dudley pays the rent, the utilities, the telephone. "We consult each other if we are going to buy a painting, for instance. Dudley tends to be more extravagant, I'm more conservative. "Usually she pays the taxis because she thinks I overtip," adds Dudley.

Beverly keeps her maiden name in her work. "That's how I was always known in the theatre before I got married, so I saw no reason to change it. It would only have confused people."

They have separate friends, particularly Beverly's former theatre friends. She does most of the cooking, but Dudley helps. "I hang up their clothes. I don't know how I do it, but I can't." Beverly's clothes. I don't know why. Sometimes I say I'm nothing but a pickup truck, but I can't stand to see a lot of clothes piling up, which tends to happen when you're working."

They share many of the same interests, particularly in their work. Dudley thinks he is more involved in Beverly's work than vice versa. "I am so tired when I come home that I don't really want to discuss my work. Also I'm very interested in theatre. Then she gets all her telephone calls at home, so I can't help being involved."

Beverly works late two nights a week, and on those nights Dudley is responsible for feeding and putting their daughter to bed.

Otherwise, the only aspect of their independence that has been all but obliterated by their marriage is their privacy. "I am not on my own enough," Dudley says. "Only when Beverly visits her mother, and I stay home, do I have a little time, and it's great." Beverly agrees. "I don't have enough time alone, particularly with the child," she confesses. "There are days when I just don't want to come home, and I wish I had a separate room I could go to."

That is why neither of them, although constantly eligible, will go into politics. (Former Mayor Robert Wagner is Dudley Morris's uncle.) "You give up all your own privacy," Dudley says. "It's too much work, and too much money." Beverly thinks that she would not mind being a politician's wife-in the face of current political wives' discontent. Her reason is simple, but cruel: "I could be a politician's wife," she declares, "because I would still be very independent and do my own work. I would never be worrying whether my husband was home. I'd be too busy. And I would not waste the time alone."

Beverly and Dudley Morris have retained their independence within the partnership with little difficulty. They went on doing what they were doing before, and did not feel threatened by keeping certain things separate such as money, friends, time at work.

Many of today's couples have decided that sharing, for them, should be on an even more limited basis. Frequently one reads about people who have chosen to live in separate apartments during the week and move only on weekends. Fancier still are the Kissingers, living in different cities during the week. Others find a new sexual independence in an "open" marriage. There are no absolutes to commitment any more. Yet one of the most modern and independent couples around, Nancy Friday and Bill Manville, enjoy a partnership that is traditional, ideally so, in its closeness and shared living.

"The point is, we knew how independent we were when we met," says Nancy, whose book on sexual fantasies, My Secret Garden, will be out in paperback this August. "We knew we had an independent history, each of us. In fact, Bill had written two books about the joys of bachelorhood."

Bill, also a highly successful book and magazine writer, adds that Nancy was famous, too, as a nonmarried. "The glamorous hold-out, she was called," he says. "Yet as soon as we met each other, we knew we wanted to get married. Our only decision was that we must start building from a shared common past. We must have a common history."

"So we instantly left New York," Nancy takes up the tale. "We had to leave the place where we had been independent, where everything reminded us of our independence. We had to begin our life together. Make friends together. Do everything together—a common history, as Bill says. And since then, we've never been separated."

"The only agreement made at their marriage was—Nobody Goes to an Office. "We both decided, what was the point of getting married if it divides into office versus home, so you only see each other at prescribed hours. They have been together twenty-four hours a day for nine years. "I can't imagine that there is anything that wouldn't be better if I shared it with Bill," declares Nancy. "I think I understood that from the very beginning. That was the reason for getting married."

"They travel together, leave parties together ("Bill always knows when to leave a party. Of course I leave with him"), even work in the same room, an almost unheard of feat for two writers to achieve."

At first Bill in the traditional way, ran the checkbook. But then they found that Nancy was more organized and better at it, so now she runs it. Nancy is a better cook, so she does it. Bill happily makes coffee and washes dishes. "We're not competitive, I think that's very important," says Bill.

"So sharing things never became a competitive issue. It's very hard to live with, if you're always working out that you do your share, I do my share, etc. You're always keeping score, so if somebody's not done as much today as the other person, you fight about it."

An interesting example of this noncompetitive is when Nancy travels to promote her books. Bill, of course, goes too. "People, men particularly, get uncomfortable when they see you in the headlines," Nancy explains, and Bill carrying the bags. But Bill is the most unthreatened male I have ever met. I've never seen him threatened by the traditional idea of what it is to be a man." That, too, is vitally important, if you are going to be sharing a life. You must learn to take off all the labels of what is his kind of work and what is her kind of work."

Bill and Nancy reflect with satisfaction on the demands and rewards of being a married couple. But for the Tellows, the Morrises and the Manvilles, and for all the independent couples who make it work, one underlying dynamic is present—the will to share. They wanted to build a partnership. In Kay Tellow's words: "We were working toward a common goal, that we were partners. We never thought about pulling together. But when you decide to share a life together, that is what you do."

"We were working toward a common goal, that we were partners. We never thought about pulling together. But when you decide to share a life together, that is what you do."

Extensive building materials:

1. Regular Marine Fir and Royal
When men are free from traditional job striving, leadership striving, and physical striving they have the chance to be home more frequently and children see a new image of masculinity—a father who is seriously strong in the home setting by participating in it. "The man with a human identity, the basis of the new masculine identity, is laying the foundation for a whole new family life, where the parents constantly have role options open to them. Children come to see the mother's activity outside the house as one on which the family depends, not just something she enjoys as an extra. And they accept that the household is run equally by both parents."

"The Earrells both in their thirties and eight years, live in a big, comfortable modern apartment in Arlington, Va. They have no children yet, share the household, have a joint checking account—and leave little love notes around when either leaves the other for a day or two. They made the transition from his classic idea of Superman and her concept of Perfection to the happy interlocking partnership they have to day over several years. "It was a slow process of working and thinking about it every week," he became a member of NOW before she did. They each joined consciousness-raising groups "basically a tool, helpful because it en- ables you to see patterns in your own behavior, gives you insight, and shows you other people have the same problems you do. You create a subculture of support for one another and you learn to be able to live off the internal rewards of knowing what you're doing is making you feel right." There is nothing strident, aggressive, or domineering about Warren as he outlines his work on resocialization and changing men's attitudes. He is especially strong and very persuasive. "When the negative image of woman starts being obliterated, then it will be easy for all of us to come into contact with the feminine, more feminine, parts of our personality. One of the real values of men's liberation in relationships is that you can be more of an individual yet along with it does more sharing and understanding. I share much more with my wife today, she really understands my problems, I know hers. We both benefit. And that's beautiful. But I still have a lot to learn."
