cape Art, an art show by Raleigh architect Vincent Whitehurst, is now open at the bar Foundation and runs through March. The mixed media (acrylic paint and india ink) paintings, part of a total crop of over 90 drawings and paintings from Whitehurst's surge. Foundation (nobody under 21 admitted - after all it is a bar), 213 Fayetteville Street, Suite 010, Raleigh, 4:00pm - 2:00

Edward Durell Stone, the iconic and controversial architect whose firm designed the NC Legislative Building; the original Blue Museum of Art building; and the Mary Duke Biddle Music building at Duke, will present two talks to discuss his new book Edward Durell Stone: A Son's Untold Story Of A Legendary Architect. Friday, March 15, Quail Ridge Books at 7:30 p.m, free (get there early for a seat). Also at 11 a.m. at the NC Museum of Art: East Building, Museum Auditorium, $23 Members, $28 Nonmembers. Stone's father was criticized for his architectural modernism by adding classical elements which were heralded by the public but as far as the architecture community, not so much. He also got into a feud with Henry Kamphoefner, dean of the School of Design at NC State University, over the design of the NC State Museum, which today is considered one of the finest modern buildings in the United States. The 334-page book, published by Rizzoli New York, reveals previously unknown details and anecdotes accompanied by a complete photographic inventory of his father's dazzling trajectory in the modern era and also covers Stone's chaotic personal life.

Join us in welcoming Louisville's Roberto de Leon of De Leon & Primmer Architecture on Friday, March 30, 6pm, at the AIA NC Architecture and Design, 14 East Peace Street, Raleigh. As Jury Chair for the 3rd Annual AIA Triangle Residential Architecture Competition, Mr. De Leon will focus on residential design, regional influences, and the importance of historical preservation. De Leon's firm has been a participant in the prestigious Architectural League of New York's Emerging Voice Series. In 2010, De Leon & Primmer were chosen as one of the ten most progressive international firms as part of their Design Vanguard series. The evening free and open to the public.

Interiors takes eight postwar homes and teases out what makes their rooms work. From an aluminum kit house and several ranch homes, to a small builder's ranch and a suburban split-level, the book showcases living stylishly while still having a life. Homeowners' stories, design choices, furniture arrangements, flooring, window coverings, fresh finishes and much more. Styles range from classic midcentury and comfortable to modern and eclectic. Sidebars discuss contemporary vs. original kitchens and baths, window replacement and appropriate lighting. The book offers readers plenty of ideas and resources to translate to their own ranch homes.
