NCMH Sponsor Profile: Besh Cabinets. Launched by Becky Shankle of Eco-Modernism, Besh is a line of modern, clean, simple, quality-crafted cabinetry made from sustainable materials and well suited for Modern homes and businesses in and around the Triangle. All Besh cabinets are manufactured in the USA primarily of lumber materials that would otherwise be discarded. And Besh's variety of color facades and wood-look veneers gives their clients maximum style with minimal impact on the environment. During the process of remodeling a kitchen, Besh promises a seamless, turnkey experience without the drama of a typical remodel: no messy strangers stepping on the dog's tail, no toxic chemicals harmful for your children's lungs, no nightmarish parade of missing parts, and absolutely no pizza-eating for six weeks solid. The folks at Besh manage everything, from the logistics of demolition to references for the best energy-saving appliances, to stylish alternatives to granite counter-tops. Says Shankle, "We'll even provide you with compost-able paper plates (and a beer at Lilly's Pizza if you need it)."

Saturday, September 20. This past summer, NCSU's School of Architecture Summer Design/Build Program joined hands with Benevolence Farm to design and build a vegetable wash barn. As the inaugural new structure on the recently acquired land, the Benevolence Farm envisioned an iconic and spiritually uplifting building that would capture the essence of rural North Carolina vernacular architecture. The simple wood framed structure was designed to maximize natural light, provide a generous covered work area, house tool storage, dry food storage, and climate controlled cool storage. The open plan is intended for multiple work, gathering, and entertaining uses. The recently completed project is beautifully detailed, open, airy, comfortable, and inviting. The team from Benevolence Farm and NC State look forward to many years of work, play, growth, and nourishment in the Benevolence Barn. To assist with construction costs there
