Now on USModernist Radio: Most people refer to architect Mies van der Rohe as Mies, which puts him into that rare club of people known by their first names, like Cher or Sting or Wynonna. Mies got worldwide attention with two projects, the Barcelona Pavilion and the Villa Tugendhat. Dirk Lohan, grandson of Mies, was born near Berlin in 1938 and left Germany to study with his grandfather at the Illinois Institute of Technology. Later, he worked with Mies designing projects as the New National Gallery in Berlin, the IBM office building in Chicago and The Toronto Dominion Centre. Dirk is known for the renovated Soldier Field, the original McDonald's campus (where he witnessed the first McNuggets), and many other buildings.

Frank Gehry turns 90. Paul Goldberger remembers architect Kevin Roche, who just died at 96. Women in Architecture awards. Hat tips to Daniel Perrin, Leilani Carter, and Virginia Faust.

New book out March 19: Making Marks: Architect's Sketchbooks, the Creative Process, by Will Jones. The book follows up on the highly successful Architects' Sketchbooks, which presented, for the first time, the rich breadth of sketches being created by contemporary architects following the digital revolution. Taking a post-digital perspective, the sixty renowned architects whose work is collected here show how drawing has been refined since the reawakening of this basic technique. Notepads, stacks of paper, pencils and fine-point pens are as present in the architect's studio as phalanxes of screens. The introduction reviews the importance of the physical sketch and its vital part in the architect's creative process.
